Do you need to refinance?

But don't know who to trust?

Hauppauge, NY – This is a task many of us dread. At one time or another in our lives we have to refinance, whether it's to get some money to dormer your house or to consolidate your bills. Often, refinancing is the only way you can accomplish these goals. You come to this realization and then dread the road that lies ahead. What do you do now? Who do you call? What questions do you ask?

I have a confession to make. I, myself have refinanced three times in the last five years. And you know what? I was ripped off twice!! All three times I prepared myself for the process and figured I would do it right and get a good deal. Not a chance!!

I GOT TRICKED TWICE!!

How infuriating! You have to refinance, there's no way around it and you are forced into this process that the mortgage lenders have formulated to force you to play by their rules. Sometimes you get a document called a Good Faith Estimate (GFE). What a joke these things are! These GFEs are supposed to tell you what your interest rate is and what your closing costs are. You get this thing and say, "OK, my closing costs are $10,000 and my interest rate is 6.25%". Then you go to the closing and everything is different! This is called:

THE OLD BAIT AND SWITCH.

The loan officer who has been so charming, helpful and nice explains to you how the GFE is only an estimate and the rate is "only" one half a percent higher and the closing costs are "only" a couple of thousand more. He tells you it's essentially the same and that you should sign. Meanwhile, your contractor has your house half apart and your credit cards are late and collectors are calling you at your job!! SO you sign. That's what I did.

The second time I refinanced I thought I was getting a fixed rate. Then the same thing happened. I went to the closing and the paperwork said I was getting an adjustable rate! Can you believe it?? This loan had an interest rate that adjusted every 6 months. The loan officer (who looked younger than my 23 year old son) told me it was because my credit score was too low. NONSENSE! My credit scores were over 700, which is excellent. I knew this because I had done my homework and got a copy of my credit report. BUT ... Unfortunately, I went ahead with it anyway because I was an idiot. You would have thought that I had learned my lesson from the last time. But no! I was due for 2 mortgage payments and the phone calls from my mortgage company were coming fast and furious.

Well, the mortgage adjusted 2 times in the first year and my payment had gone up over $500.00!! I had to refinance again before my rate screamed up to a million percent!! But

THIS TIME WOULD BE DIFFERENT!!

I finally got the answers I was looking for. I read an article in a local paper about a mortgage expert who had written a report on how to go about refinancing your home and how you can make sure you can't possibly be taken advantage of and ripped off. The article gave a toll free number to call to get a copy of the Free Report mentioned in the ad. As much as I hate answering machines, I was pleased to listen to a recorded message with an option to get the "Free Report" sent by mail. When the Free Report came, I finally understood what I was doing wrong!

The Free report explained that most people make the simple mistake of not getting the loan disclosures mailed to them. Unfortunately, most people just hear WHAT THEY WANT TO HEAR! Just because they say you are going to get that great rate at such low fees doesn't mean you're actually going to get it!! Don't let this happen to you! You learn what to ask for from the mortgage lender you're dealing with.

The mortgage industry is one of the most highly regulated in the country because of all the abuse of these predatory lenders. You learn who these guys are and how to avoid them. Does it sound like maybe this author and I are a little paranoid? Well, when you're dealing with your home, don't you think

YOU SHOULD BE PARANOID?

Just look at what this Free Report tells you: The 10 questions you must ask any mortgage lender, the six things your lender doesn't want you to know, and lastly, the six biggest and costliest mistakes made when refinancing.

As a very experienced financial analyst, I give this report my highest recommendation. You're crazy if you don't at least call to get a copy of the Free Report for yourself. To receive this Free Report call the toll free number:

1-888-355-0091 Extension 8070

for a free 24 hour recorded message. Finally, someone figured out a way to give the public the real scoop on the bank and mortgage industry. Call Now!

TWO THUMBS UP! YAH!

ALSO ... the author of this free report (on a very limited basis) gives you the option to let him give you free advice himself. I strongly advise you to select this option. You just tell them you want to deal with the President of the company on the recorded message and they will send you an analysis form to fill out and the President of the company will personally call you back and give you a free phone consultation. Wow!! This is what I did. He gave me incredible advice and got me a great deal and an education to last me a lifetime. I can't thank him enough.

This Free Report is provided by Long Island Home Mortgage located at 700 Veterans Memorial Hwy. Hauppauge, NY 11788 (877-724-9010). They are a registered mortgage broker with the NY State Banking Department and mortgage loans are arranged with third party providers.

Jackson Pollock Drip Painting Turns Up in the Rafters of a Garage

By Dan Rattiner

Two employees of Dan's Papers, Julia Nasser and David Rattiner, have found a huge Jackson Pollock painting in the rafters of the garage out back of the main Dan's Papers building where the newspapers are stored. They were out there looking for a back issue from 1989 for a customer at the front counter Friday afternoon when it simply fell down off the rafters and hit David in the head. He was stunned by the impact but was otherwise uninjured.

"There's lots of stuff up there," David said. "There's the hardtop from my dad's Triumph sports car. There are some box springs, some fishing rods and some spare tires. But who knew about this?"

The painting is a drip painting, done in oils, on canvas stretched on a wooden frame three by four feet. There seems little doubt that it is a Jackson Pollock. It looks like something he might have done after becoming famous for his drip paintings in 1949. We called the Parrish Art Museum, which referred us to an expert in the area, Albert Weinglas of Yale University, who has a weekend home in the Southampton area. He came over Saturday morning.

"I would date it from 1951," he said. "It's full of confidence. He's been proclaimed the greatest artist of his time. He's at the top of his game. I would say it is from August of that year, when he did "Blue Poles." It's using the same paint colors, and I recognize the texture of this particular paint. It's bold, slashing, brilliant. He may have done it just before he did "Blue Poles." Or maybe just after. I'd say it's even greater than "Blue Poles."

"On the other hand, it is unsigned, except for this inscription on the back. This was not like

The inscription on the back, in a Number 4 pencil often favored by Jackson Pollock reads, "to Marilyn M., from JP. You're the best. I will love you always. XXXOXXO."

There is no date.

On the other hand, there is evidence that "Marilyn M." might mean Marilyn Monroe. There has long been speculation that Marilyn Monroe and Jackson Pollock might have gotten together in the Hamptons. Both of them were out here at the same time. Jackson, was living in Springs with his wife Lee Krasner, with whom he was having a stormy relationship. Marilyn was at a cottage in Amagansett for the summer in 1951, with her second husband, playwright Arthur Miller. Photos taken of the pair at the time show them as a happy, newly married couple. But you never know. She and Jackson were just five minutes from one another by car.

Some years ago, this writer interviewed the longtime owner of the Miller Store in Springs. Mr. Miller had contact with both Jackson Pollock and Marilyn Monroe in that year. He denied the possibility that they might have gotten together.

"We had a gas station out front at the time," he told me. "Once Miss Monroe and her hus-Jackson. He always signed his work. And who is this Marilyn? When you consider everything, you'd have to say that maybe it is the real thing and maybe it isn't. It is, how you say in America, the jury is still out? We will have the results of the paint analysis in April. We probably need a team of experts to have more opinions about this. So in the end, I suppose, this'll turn out to be a fake. I guess, anyway."

Jon Stewart, host of CTV's award-winning "The Daily Show," who hosted the Academy Awards earlier this month, will now host the Peabody Awards at its landmark 65th anniversary celebration on June 5 in New York City. "He will provide a refreshing combination of journalistic smarts and comic genius to our ceremony," said Horace Newcomb, director of the Peabody Awards, last week. Stewart is a two-time Peabody Award winner.

On Friday, March 24th, folks gathered at the Top of the Wharf Restaurant in Hampton Bays for a benefit cocktail party to aid John and Mary Windels, whose shrimp boat, The Hail Mary, was destroyed and sunk off the Shinnecock Inlet. Those who wish to contribute may still do so by calling 631-723-3371.

Oscar-winning actress Gwyneth Paltrow is expecting a son, her second child, with Chris Martin. She announced last week that he will be named Mortimer after East Hampton's Steven Spielberg, whom she affectionately refers to as "Uncle Morty."

The intensely private Howard Stern recently became infuriated when his former boss, CBS chief Les Moonves, included details of Stern's salary over the years in the 43-page lawsuit CBS filed against the self-proclaimed "King of All Media."

* * *

Perhaps due to his eerily-familiar white suit and sunglasses at the 2006 Grammys, Kanye West has been called an imposter of Sean Combs, the East Hampton resident also known as P Diddy. With his own record label, a new clothing line, a movie in preproduction and three more Grammys in the trophy case, the hip-hop demi-god has no reason to worry.

East Hampton's Dr. Judith Sulzberger, of the New York Times, is the honorary co-chair with Page Morton Black of the Parkinson's Disease Foundation gala May 17 at the Pierre Hotel. Lukas Foss, the conductor/pianist who is very popular in the Hamptons, will perform.

Good news is out for all those New York ladies mourning the loss of "Sex and the City," the beloved series starring Amagansett's Sarah Jessica Parker. HBO is finalizing a deal for an unscripted comedy pilot written by "Sex and the City" co-producer and writer Amy Harris. The show is an attempt to capture the vivacity, sexuality and friendship of women in a big city under the banner of a reality show.

Hairstyling headliner and Hamptonite Frederic Fekkai purchased billionaire John Kluge's Fifth Avenue apartment for close to $7.4 million last week.

band got a flat tire on Cranberry Hole Road in Amagansett. We went out on a road call and fixed it for them. What a beautiful woman she was. And they seemed very much in love. We pretended not to notice the fact that she was this famous movie star – we really didn't know much about any playwright out here at the time – and we fixed the tire. That was the only time I ever saw her.

"As for Jackson, he came in all the time for groceries. He lived right up the street just a short bike ride away. Sometimes, when he was short for cash, he'd give me a painting. I still have one. Another I sold to a museum when it was time for my daughter to go to college."

As publisher and editor of this newspaper, I ordered this painting locked up in a closet on the second floor behind the stairs. We have to take good care of it and make sure nobody steals it. I have the only key to the closet so I think it's okay.

Meanwhile, David, Julia and I went back to the garage and took everything down from the rafters. We wanted to see what else was up there. Boy, were we surprised. Climbing a ladder, we found the remains of a queen size mattress and pillows up there. One of them had a tag on it that read "Diamond's Furniture, East Hampton, $4.50." Another had a tag that said "Do Not Remove Under Penalty of the Law." There were copper candlesticks with the remains of candles in them, several old magazines from 1951, including The Marriage and Sex Guide Magazine, a magazine in French entitled Lingerie de Paris, and a copy of Confidential Magazine with stories in it about movie stars. There was also the August 7, 1949 edition of Life magazine with the featured article about Jackson Pollock in it.

We found two empty bottles of Cote de Rhone red from 1948 and we found an old radio up there with an extension cord rotted away. There were also the remains of some bits of silk underwear. And one high heeled shoe.

Perhaps most interesting were two inscriptions carved into two of the wooden rafters. One read "JP Loves MM, 1951." The other read "JP Loves KW, 1954." We also found a taillight from a 1949 Oldsmobile, which we have determined is from the exact model of car, "Rocket 88," driven by Jackson Pollock when he was killed in Springs in that accident in 1954. His wife had gone to Paris, he was with two single young women in their early twenties and, drunk, he failed to negotiate the curve just north of Abraham's Path on Springs-Fireplace Road and crashed into a tree.

Marilyn Monroe died in 1963 at the age of 43, from an overdose of pills in Beverly Hills, California. Just a year earlier she had sung Happy Birthday to John Kennedy in the White House.

Is it possible that in the summer of 1951, under the noses of Arthur Miller and Lee Krasner, these two would drive in Pollock's Oldsmobile down the Montauk Highway to a secret garage in Bridgehampton, far from the prying eyes of those that knew them? In 1951, the house that twenty years later would be bought by this publisher to be the home of Dan's Papers was owned by a family named Danowski. They have since passed on, so there is no way we can confirm or deny that they welcomed the young couple, ages 33 and 21 respectively, to their home and allowed them to enjoy the use of the rafters of their garage out back.

But if they did, except for the painting, which we have been told could be worth about two hundred and fifty million dollars, we will keep their secret safe. Mum's the word.

I'M REALLY GLAD
THE COLLEGE CLOSED.

Last Graduate

The Final Senior at Southampton College Finally Wins His Diploma

By Dan Rattiner

Rob Florio, who owns several major businesses in the Hamptons, finally got his bachelors of arts degree from Southampton College the other day. He got it Cum Laude. Twenty five years after he took his first classes there, and eight months after the college closed. It's an interesting story.

Florio was born and raised in Pennsylvania in the suburbs of Philadelphia. He did know about eastern Long Island. He had a great uncle who had a summer house in Southold and lived there part time. The family visited him on occasion.

When he began his senior year at Martle Newtown High School, Rob began, as all the other kids did, to look around at what college he might go to. Most of the other kids were applying to Pitt or Penn State or the University of Pennsylvania. Florio thought he would like to go farther afield.

"Go anywhere you want," his mother said. "But it has to be within a three-hour drive of one of your relatives."

It was an odd request. But Rob understood it. You can too if you think about it.

He got a map of the United States and started putting pins into it. Blue where the uncles and aunts were. Red where the nearby colleges were. The uncles and aunts were all in the Northeast, but none were as far away as his great uncle in Southold. And the great uncle was almost never there. Florio liked that. He'd look for a school near Southold.

"One day, I was in the college advisor's office at the high school, and I got a brochure for Southampton College. The biggest picture in the brochure was an air view of the school. You could see the ocean at one end and the Bay at the other. I showed it to some of my friends. I College?" Rob told him it wasn't necessary. He wanted to go there.

"Yeah, right," the man said. The school was only fifteen years old at that point. Rob asked for an application and he wanted to know about scholarships.

"Don't rush into things," the man said. "There's plenty of other schools. Anyway, there's not much in the way of scholarship money. What kind of grades do you have?"

Florio told him he was at the top of his class.

The man shrugged. "You can do better than this," the man said.

Oh, well, Rob thought. He began to walk away and suddenly the man called after him.

"Hey, wait a minute."

Rob turned around.

"You play Lacrosse? They want to build a Lacrosse team."

Rob had on a school jacket with MARTLE NEWTOWN

LACROSSE on the back of it. It belonged to his brother. But he didn't say anything.

* * *

Rob Florio went to Southampton College for the full four years, beginning in 1980. He lived in a dorm, and he enjoyed going here. During his time at the college, there was a battle underway between the parent LIU in Brooklyn want to go THERE, I told them."

Rob went to a college fair at a high school gym in downtown Philadelphia, and much to his surprise found a booth for Southampton College. This was where he learned Southampton was a branch of Long Island University, with headquarters in Brooklyn.

"Hey kid," the man at the booth said, calling him over. "Want to hear about Southampton and the powers that were at Southampton College. LIU had founded the college, and wholly owned it. Now they wanted to change its name.

"I liked the idea of it being Southampton College," Florio said. "We all did."

At the time, the President of Southampton College was Harry Marmion. He reported to the Chairman of the Board of LIU in Brooklyn, a powerful and wealthy man from Westbury named Albert Bush-Brown. Marmion, in surveying his school, had made a request that Bush-Brown didn't like. Marmion told him they needed a sewage treatment plant at Southampton. It hadn't been built with one. But the place had grown and it was irresponsible not to build one.

For those that knew Bush-Brown, what happened next was not unexpected. Bush-Brown told Marmion that Southampton wasn't actually a college, it was a campus only, so they didn't need a sewage plant and he, Marmion, couldn't make those decisions, anyway.

"It's Southampton College," Marmion said.

"Then we'll change the name," Bush-Brown said. "From now on it will be called the Southampton Center of Long Island University."

"You can't call this place a Center. A Center is where you go shopping."

"And by the way, at the end of your term, since Southampton won't be a college anymore, we won't be needing the services of a President for it. We'll have someone with the title of Chancellor."

"That wouldn't be me," Marmion said.

"I know."

Changing the name to Southampton Center involved a lot of stationery, signage and logos. It took a lot of people to get involved in this, and practically all of them objected to the idea. In the end, Marmion's contract was not renewed. But the place became the Southampton Campus of LIU. (Not the Southampton Center of LIU.) And about 1995, after Bush-Brown died, it became Southampton College again.

All of this is important because, as Florio said, it was very important to all the kids that they graduate from Southampton College. They had the jackets. They wanted their diplomas to say that, too.

At the end of Florio's four years, he found himself two courses short of being able to graduate. He went to the graduation, but his name was not called. So be it. His time at University was over and it was time for him to get out into the world, which, by this time, he decided, would be the eastern end of Long Island. He liked the ocean and the bays and was an active water-skier and windsurfer. And he hoped to be a writer. He'd already had articles in Dan's Papers.

Just under twenty years later, in the spring of 2003, LIU made the stunning announcement that they would be closing Southampton College. The school had lost about $50 million during the time that LIU had tried to run it from afar. It couldn't be done that way. Brooklyn made all the decisions. And that created a morale problem. Those supposedly implementing the decisions in Southampton had no input and often implemented them lackadaisically. They might see where a decision was wrong. But Brooklyn would not listen. Okay. It was their money. The campus in Southampton would hold its last session in 2004-2005. In June of 2005, the doors to the school would close forever.

"When I first heard this," Florio said, "I thought -- there goes my last shot at getting my college degree. It's so close. Just two courses. Everybody thinks I'm college educated. And I am. But now, I've got to do something about this. If I don't, next June, there will be nobody at the school to look through back records, or even back records kept for all I knew. I would have to try to get a sheepskin."

And it would be particularly important to get one that read Southampton College. That was where he went, after all.

Florio went to see Robert Pattison, who was head of the English Department. It was January 2005, six months before everybody was either fired or moved to another "campus" of LIU, the CW Post Campus in Brookville, Long Island. Pattison looked at Florio's folder and saw that he did indeed have excellent college grades, but there were these two incompletes in two English courses, which, after a while with nothing done, had been turned into Fs. He told Florio that he could arrange work

Mind Your Manners

The Google Earth Satellite Website Will Give You No Place to Hide

By Dan Rattiner

Have you seen Google Earth? It's one of the most astonishing things. You get it for free. Just download it from the website by that name, and then open it and you will see the earth as if from a spaceship. Type in a zip code or the name of a town and state, East Hampton, New York, for example, and your spaceship travels silently around the earth and down, slowly arriving over to where East Hampton is located, and then it heads in for a landing. It arrives just north of downtown, in some woods just off Olympic Heights Road. Here you can see all the cars and all the buildings, frozen in time. And then, using controls at the bottom of the screen, you can go up one road and down another, or just over all the trees and buildings, and just basically get a good look at what's happening in old East Hampton, New York.

Or you can, as I did, type in on the search bar the address of your very own home. I did that. And the spaceship took off, went up in the sky maybe a mile, and then came back down right at my home on Three Mile Harbor Road. And there it was. I could see the powerboat on its trailer in my yard for the winter. I could see a white car parked down on the street. Whose car was that? My car wasn't there. But, of course, I wasn't home. I was down at the beach typing up this article. Ah hah. Or was I? I rejiggered the controls to see myself down at the beach, but I wasn't there. Why was that?

What I learned later, because I was really curious about this, was that Google Earth is not in real time. It's been created from photographic images taken by US Satellites available in the public domain for the various Global Positioning System industry people and the pictures. However, when I went to look for Bridgehampton, where our office is on Montauk Highway, I found that the patch of photograph that included Dan's Papers, the Kmart Shopping Center and the Bridgehampton Bank was too blurry for a close look. To the east, it was sharp as a tack down by Pulver Gas and the Candy Kitchen and from there all the way to East Hampton. The blurry patch in western Bridgehampton extended about two miles, where the high quality picked up again around Chariots of Fire Auto Repair in Water Mill. I could see Charlie working away there on a Porsche — I couldn't quite figure out the year and model — I guess sometime within the past month. I'm sure they've got it fixed and out the door.

On one level, the existence of Google Earth is an astonishing and sobering thing. Where it starts out when you load it, way out there in space looking down at the Earth, gives you a remarkable perspective on what is really going on here, with all us tiny people walking and driving around on this globe zipping through the cosmos. But on another level, it's disturbing. If I'm zipping along in my car with one of my grandchildren and he suddenly says Papa

Needless to say, some governments around the world are highly disturbed about the images that can be seen on Google Earth.

the National Weather Service people over the past few weeks and months. You can get images with this system almost anywhere in the world, although there remain a great many places where the imagery has not been worked out to the kind of detail that I found in East Hampton, where you can see stuff down to about four feet, loud and clear.

It's a big world. It takes a while to take all

I have to go, I have to go, I'll pull over the car so he can rush into the bushes, but I'll probably think twice about doing this in East Hampton rather than in the blurry section of Bridgehampton. Hmmm.

And there are other things about Google Earth, which has now made its way to the highest levels of government and the desktops of investigative journalists around the world.

For one thing there is Russia. When Russia was the Soviet Union, which it was until its collapse around 1990, it was government policy that in vast areas of the country there be no accurate maps at all about where things were. Either you knew your way around or you didn't. This may seem bizarre to us today, but the Russians of those days had suffered the experience of the German armies battling through the steppes of the Ural Mountains to the very gates of Moscow 2,000 miles from Berlin. Had they not known of the roads along the way, they might have gotten lost for a while, had to stop, and in the end been turned back much sooner than it turned out.

Oddly, I read in an article that not only has this practice of "no maps" continued on through the end of World War II and the Cold War, but right up until today. No word has come down to change the rules. And so, for example, the location of the Russian Space Center where they launch all the rockets with the cosmonauts is known. It is the Baikonur Space Center. But the City of Baikonur, Kazakhstan, after which it is named, is two hundred miles to the west to confuse everybody. In the article, the reporter interviewed an American oil worker who is employed at a drilling site in Siberia, and in theory he is supposed to not know where he is. They can't stop him using a pocket GPS system, however, and so he knows anyway. But he otherwise goes along with the official rules. When in Rome, etc.

You can bet that the Russians today were not too happy to see a Google Earth view of the oil-drilling site the reporter was writing about. In a more recent article, in the New York Times, there was a story about a giant American owned gold mine in some uninhabited and highly forested mountains of Indonesia. It was not visible from anywhere in the country from the ground. But accompanying the story was the Google Earth picture of this mine — a huge, barren, pollution spewing mess occupying 5,000 acres — with great globs of waste flowing down a mountainside into a passing river. The river was polluted all the way downriver for hundreds of miles. What a scandal.

Needless to say, some governments around the world are highly disturbed about the images that can be seen on Google Earth. There are issues of security, military secrets, oppression, detention camps, etc. I cannot imagine regimes in countries such as North Korea, Haiti, Turkey and Zambia are particularly happy about this.

On the other hand, people will have an enormously increased ability to learn about one another. There will be issues of safety. People at sea who might die in a storm will be rescued. Tsunamis will be seen as they begin. Results of disasters in the mountains will be fully and immediately apparent.

And all of this is only going to get more intense and accurate as time goes on. The European Union has just announced a new satellite system which will compete with the United States-based GPS system, but with images as detailed as one foot. You'll be able to see the expressions on people's faces. You'll be able to identify them. The Russians, it is now reported, have their own system, which is under tight government wraps.

All I can say is in the future, in public, out of doors, don't do anything that you wouldn't do in front of, say, five hundred million people. Mind your manners, as my mother says. And welcome to the New World, the Real World. •

LIU SH to Become Stony Brook Southampton. Open by September.

By Alan Michael Braveman

The end of the end, almost. After months of protracted negotiations, and a long, tortuous series of conflicted statements about Long Island University's need to close the Southampton College Campus to save the rest of the University, and to sell it to the "highest bidder," or in a revised statement at a later date, the need for a "continuation of higher education on the East End," David Steinberg, the President of Long Island University and Admiral John R. Ryan, the Chancellor of SUNY, signed an agreement to allow SUNY to purchase the Southampton Campus of Long Island University for $35,000,000.

The March 24th agreement also allows Long Island University to maintain a presence on the campus for up to three years. A closing date of on or before August 31st of 2006 is also called for in the agreement. The sale includes the purchase of 42 buildings on approximately 82 acres.) The buildings consist of academic centers, classrooms, art studio buildings, residence halls, the radio station offices and broadcast studios, and maintenance buildings, as well as the unfinished and finished Library buildings. The Marine Science Center, docks and buildings, also included in the sale, were all part of a three-year lease agreement reached with Stony Brook last year and now has more than a 100 students enrolled in it.

The signing ceremony was a fascinating mix of political bravado, hubris and, in some cases, sincere and pure joy on the parts of the various dignitaries present. Dr. Steinberg's attempts to put a brave face on the sale of the campus and his call to bequeath a "legacy of teaching excel-ing over the Southampton Campus since he joined SUNY. His sense of humor and gravitas was not lost on the enthusiastic crowd in the auditorium as he told of being stopped by Southampton Campus Security as he jogged across the campus in the early morning and was not recognized.

Stony Brook will begin to hold classes in September of 2006 on the campus. They expect the enrollment to rise to 2000 within a five-year period with the opening semester being closer to a 200-student enrollment. Dr. Shirley Kenny stated that "environment and sustainability are the critical issues for the 21st century" and will be the cornerstone of the new campus' curriculum.

She also stated that "this will be an extraordinary opportunity for students to help shape our response to the global challenges we face and this would not have been possible without the support of Chancellor Ryan and the efforts of Senator LaValle. Their encouragement and critical assistance means that the site at Southampton will be retained for educational purposes, benefiting the economy of the East End, the people of Long Island and most of all, the students throughout the region."

Senator LaValle and New York State Senator Fred W. Thiele, Jr. spoke glowingly of their great pride and joy in being able to generate the funds to bring this issue of a Private Institution of Higher Learning and a Public Institution of Higher Learning working together to a successful conclusion. Dr. Kenny later noted that without the help of NY State Sen. LaValle, Assemblyman Thiele and Congressman Tim Bishop this event would have been a non-starter. It was also noted that the presence of Stony Brook at the former Southampton College site will allow the cost of higher education to become much more affordable for New York State residents as well as bring back a functioning cultural center to the East End.

In addition, as part of the agreement, Long Island University will maintain its presence on the campus with some graduate classes, the Homeland Security Program and Continuing Education programs, for at least three years. The WLIU Radio station will remain in its present space for three years also as it continues to broadcast from its studio space in Chancellors Hall and on the cell tower on the college campus.

There was some sadness amongst the alumni of Southampton College at the passing of their much loved institution but it was tinged with joy and elation that there would still be a college on the campus and one that might finally receive the financial backing it so sorely needed but never received from Long Island University. Indeed, Nora Detweiler, a member of the class of '05, is in charge of planning an all alumni reunion for Southampton College Students in May of this year on the campus. She said, "Our memories and hearts will always be here, and no matter what it is called we will love it and be proud to be a part of it."

Big Changes

Properties Being Sold in Sag Harbor, Hampton Bays, Montauk, Springs etc.

By David Lion Rattiner

There are a lot of big commercial properties here that are going to be much different in the very near future. Almost every village in the Hamptons, including Montauk, has one dominant, large property that not only has been put up for sale, but already has developers pouring millions of dollars into it.

For example, look at Hampton Bays. The Canoe Place Inn, also known as CPI, is a landmark property. Built as a private residence in 1859 for the Medbury family and established as The Canoe Place Inn and Restaurant in 1926 by Catherine Lay, this place has been synonymous with the Hampton Bays history filled with gangsters, politicians and speakeasies. As of last week, developers with $100 million are set to turn it into time-share apartment rentals, complete with 24-hour concierge service and five-star hotel accommodations.

Over in Sag Harbor, 21 Water Street is going to be changed into condominiums. The popular nightclub that boomed loud music out into the night for many years will be saying goodbye. The nightclub is in contract to be purchased by a company called Code Red, which applied and received a "change of use" variance so that the hotspot could be turned into condos. The project also will include the construction of 30 parking spaces, 6 of which will be in an underground parking garage.

The Harborview Professional building and the Diner Building, located on Ferry Road in the same area, will also be turned into condominiums if Code Red gets its way.

The two separate projects would bring 42 apartments to the waterfront.

Over in East Hampton, a shocking announcement from local builder and restaurant owner Ben Krupinski has been flying through the air. East Hampton Point, a waterfront restaurant, a marina and a cottage rental business is for sale for $55 million.

IN GEORGICA: OUT YOU PESKY PLANTS

By David Stoll

Watching man try to control nature can be horrifying or amusing, depending upon how man inevitably fails in his quest. It was horrifying, for example, when people started scrubbing rocks covered by the oil spilled by the Exxon Valdez, unwittingly destroying the oil-eating bacteria that would far more effectively have cleaned Prince William Sound. Fortunately, here at home, it is merely amusing watching people haplessly try to rid Georgica Pond of phragmites. This perennial endeavor is in the news once again, as it has been for years past, and will be for years in the future.

The reed called phragmites australis is a common form of marsh vegetation. Marsh vegetation is an important part of the ecosystem, among other things providing food for many organisms when it decays. The reed naturally found in the Hamptons, including in Georgica Pond, is cordgrass. But for at least a decade phragmites have been aggressively taking over. Georgica residents and many environmentalists consider this a bad thing, worrying that the phragmites are choking the natural ecosystem. In fact, nature will always find its own balance if left alone. And, indeed, a scientific study some years ago conducted at Accabonac Harbor concluded that the assumption that phragmites are less nutritious for pond organisms is unfounded.

But never mind that. People want the phragmites gone because they are so thick and tall they block the view of the water and are also impenetrable. End of pond. Bringing to mind Albert Einstein's observation that doing the same thing over and over while expecting different results is a form of insanity, East Hamptonites spend a portion of each year proposing ways to rid Georgica Pond of phrag-

Everyone in the area is hoping that it will remain the same, but anyone could turn it into anything, even a private residence. The property is five acres, has a 400-seat restaurant that faces Three Mile Harbor, a full service marina with 58 slips, 14 guesthouses, a swimming pool and tennis courts. If that place changes dramatically, it will be missed.

Boys Harbor is also for sale, which has caused an even bigger stir in Springs. A lot of people are hoping the town will buy the large property and preserve the camp and the fireworks display that goes on every year. Also in East Hampton, the shop Victoria's Mother closed because the rent got too high. Not much word yet on what is going to replace the small space, but obviously it won't be a place that sells interesting little gifts for mostly under twenty bucks.

Although not a huge project, it is important to note the closing of another staple of the Hamptons community, in East Hampton. Further down 27, locals in East Hampton were stunned when they heard that O'Mally's was closing its doors after being bought by Ben Krupinski. The business is going to be renamed and changed from a burger and beer joint into a Thai restaurant. The local restaurant has been a fixture in the community, but nothing lasts forever.

Finally out in Montauk, another big project is underway. The Shepherd's Neck Inn is in contract to be sold to a company called Wavestone Properties. Although it has not yet gone to contract, owner George Hammer and principal buyer Thomas Seeley have agreed on a price. Before the summer, improvements to the restaurant and the lobby are going to be made as well as general improvements to the entire resort. The hotel structure will fortunately remain the same but the name will most likely be changed.

What does all this mean for the Hamptons? Well, it depends on who you are. Almost all of the projects are improvements for the community. However, some of the properties being replaced have a lot of nostalgic value. In a lot of these cases, a change will do some good. Although if we don't have those fireworks at Boys Harbor this year, I'm going to be really mad.

Shinnecock Indian Smoke Shop

Tit for Tat?

Gristedes Files $60 Mil. Lawsuit Against Shinnecoeks for Cigarette Losses

By Grant MacMurray

Claiming an estimated $20 million in lost profits, the Gristedes supermarket chain filed a lawsuit in Brooklyn Federal Court last Monday against the Shinnecock Nation's Southampton Reservation and the Unkechaug Reservation in Mastic for the sale of untaxed cigarettes to non-tribal members. The chain, seeking $60 million in damages, claims that such sales are intrinsically unfair to smaller businesses, and further, that they support black market economies, as well as gang activity and organized crime. Although there is a law on the books prohibiting untaxed sales to non-tribal members, the New York State Department of Taxation and Finance, in line with Governor Pataki's wishes, announced in February that the law would not be enforced. The ongoing debate centers around the $1.50 New York State sales tax as well as Federal taxes from which Native American smoke shops are exempt. This adds up to a $3 price difference per pack, making reservation sales highly attractive to the consumer. For years, the exemption has offered a means of netting profits for the beleaguered Indians. Currently, however, with tobacco use coming increasingly under fire, and eye-popping amounts of money being won in lawsuits, the issue has become politically charged, and hence somewhat muddled. In an anti-smoking, pro-profit world, heavyweights such as Mayor Mike Bloomberg and New York State Attorney General Eliot Spitzer have come out loudly against the sale of untaxed cigarettes. The tribes view the increased revenue as slight if insufficient remuneration for indignities suffered under present and past State and Federal Governments, and their respective oft Unkechaug Chief Harry Wallace felt that the suit was an attempt to "demonize" the Indian community. "Why didn't they sue the Seneca Nation, the Mohawk Nation? Clearly this is an attempt to interfere with what they believe to be a smaller more vulnerable people. Well, they are in for a surprise if they think we are not going to stand up for our rights."

There might be another reason. Gristedes Supermarket is owned by Southampton resident John Catsimatidis, who is also a major supporter of the Greek Orthodox Church of the Hamptons in Shinnecock. It must have been quite disconcerting for Mr. Catsimatidis when the Shinnecock Indian Nation brought a lawsuit against the State of New York last year, claiming ownership of a vast portion of Southampton and Shinnecock now owned by others, which includes Southampton College, the Shinnecock and National Golf Courses, the Meadow Club and also both the home of Mr. Catsimatidis and the Greek Orthodox Church of the Hamptons. There might, therefore, be several different motivations involved in this lawsuit. Perhaps not. But it is worth pointing out these coincidences.

While the sale of untaxed cigarettes to non-fickle laws.

"If the State and Federal Government won't do what is supposed to be doneGristedes will step in and do what it has to do to protect its interest [and interests] of smaller shop keepers who are facing the indignity of losing enormous amounts of business to people who don't file proper tax returns," said William Watchell, an attorney for Gristedes

Indian customers continues, so does the battle over the importance of a high state tax on the sale of cigarettes in an increasingly health-conscious and combative anti-smoking country. Certain districts of California have all but outlawed smoking in anything more public than a privately owned cubicle. Commenting on the perceived similarities in the approaches of gubernatorial hopeful Spitzer and Mayor Bloomberg despite their opposing parties, a reservation smoke shop employee who preferred not to be named said, "There is no difference between the two, Republican, Democrat, they're basically the same guy. [Hurting us] doesn't affect them, and they have no compunction to [do so so to benefit

The issue of just what rights or dispensations the Shinnecock and other tribal groups should be allowed has been debated since the time of Custer, or at least since the first tobacco levies were introduced in the 1930s. With the lines of party and ideology blurring more and more, the usual Democratic support for the underdog is no longer a given. While the proposed end measure behind the weighty taxes may be to save the world, or at least America, from its grotesque and dangerous tobacco habit, the immediate result is the reaping of significant revenue for the State. The claim from the anti-tobacco lobby is that the money is merely restitution for the incredible cost of health care for chronic smokers, a point hotly contested. Between the crusading for bodies, if not souls, and the rights of self-determination in practices deemed wicked, as well as good, the issue reaches beyond the mere use of tobacco to that harping bugbear of individual rights and freedoms verses the perceived public or majority good. It also speaks of the complete disregard for an ancient tribe's determination to stick together and better itself in a modern world. They are offering, for example, nothing to replace the smoke shops as a source of tribal income. And now comes this lawsuit.

"The disparity is huge.....[we're trying] to attain some equity here. [We are] not anti-Indian," said Gerald McKelvey, a Gristedes spokesman.

"I'm not taking the law into my own hands," added board president, John Catsimatidis, "but we're losing a lot of business and so are a lot of small businesses."

As for the "vice" itself, as my local reservation smoke shop source pointed out, "People are going to smoke, you can't stop that. [If this lawsuit succeeds,] all it ends up doing is taking away our livelihood. It's a shortsighted witch-hunt."

Last summer, I attended a benefit in East Hampton to which Kim Cattrall lent her name. Toward the end of the benefit, as the many hundreds of attendees dwindled down to mere dozens, I espied Ms. Cattrall and approached her. Although I have seen Ms. Cattrall give interviews — she always seems charming — her gutsy performance as the fabulous, powerhouse Samantha in the HBO series “Sex and the City” was so indelibly printed in my mind that I was actually a bit nervous approaching her. My concern was entirely uncalled for. Kim Cattrall was lovely, funny and gracious during our brief conversation. We chatted about the benefit and also the new book she was writing (Sexual Intelligence, which would be published later in the year).

Born in Liverpool on August 21, 1956, Cattrall, her mother (a homemaker) and father (a construction worker) moved to Canada near Vancouver when she was only three months old. She returned to England at the age of 11 to study at the London Academy of Music and Dramatic Art, and then graduated from high school in Canada at the age of 16. She next attended the American Academy of Dramatic Arts in New York on scholarship. In 1975, during her final year at the Academy, Cattrall was cast in Otto Preminger’s Rosebud. Thereafter, she returned to Canada to hone her craft as an actor with a Toronto repertory theater group.

Soon, though, Hollywood would beckon again. Universal Studios signed Cattrall to an exclusive contract; she was one of the last actors to be signed in this way before the end of the old Hollywood contract system. Throughout the late 1970s, as the new face in Hollywood, she scored many television appearances, including roles on “Logan’s Run,” “The Hardy Boys/Nancy Drew Mysteries,” “Columbo: How to Dial a Murder,” “Starsky and Hutch,” “Family,” “The Incredible Hulk,” and my own favorite show of the era, “Charlie’s Angels.”

Cattrall was also making movies at the time, but it was not until the early 1980s that she became a household name, thanks to her memorable performances in two hugely successful teen comedies, Porky’s in 1982 and Police Academy in 1984. She continued to work throughout the 1980s in television and a number of other movies, perhaps most notably in Big Trouble in Little China in 1986. Even so, her best years were yet to come.

In 1990, she won a role as a “social x-ray” in the movie version of Tom Wolfe’s scathing satire The Bonfire of the Vanities. She reportedly dieted intensely for two months before filming to get down to size 4. (Kim Cattrall, as “Sex and the City” fans know, has a fabulous curvy figure, not usually found among the Upper East Side society set.) Many other movie and television roles followed throughout the 1990s and 2000s, Universal Studios signed Cattrall to an exclusive contract; she was one of the last actors to be signed in this way before the end of the old Hollywood contract system.

including a role in a Star Trek movie and guest voice appearances on “Rugrats,” “Duckman” and “The Simpsons.” But it was her role as Samantha Jones during the six seasons of “Sex and the City” that captured America’s imagination — not that so much imagination was needed.

In case you were living under a rock, “Sex and the City” followed four single women friends in New York City, three 30-somethings and one 40-something. The 40-something, played by Cattrall, was the most sexually free and independent of the group, sleeping her way through New York City and offering her own brand of counsel to her younger friends as they tried to navigate through dysfunctional relationships. The show can now be seen on TBS and the WB network (which, like HBO, are owned by Time Warner), but the gutsy scope of Cattrall’s performance is best appreciated on the uncensored original.

Cattrall enjoyed playing Samantha — it is obvious just watching her. She has said of the show, “The show is celebrating what it’s like to be a woman. We do things [on the show] people think about but don’t vocalize. It gives men and women permission to talk in a way that is healthy.” She was particularly delighted to be playing a sexually free character in her 40s: “I’ve been playing sexually aware women most of my life. At this point I expected to be playing moms and wives. It’s exciting to play a femme fatale.”

Cattrall has also parlayed her sexual persona into writing. In 2003, she and her husband at the time, jazz musician Mark Levinson, wrote Satisfaction: the Art of the Female Orgasm, a 144-page book explaining techniques with basic language and diagrams. The voice in the book is hers (and her husband’s), not Samantha’s. Indeed, Cattrall explains that she wrote the book because, despite Samantha’s sexual satisfaction, Cattrall did not become satisfied herself until shortly before she wrote the book. She said that people “assume that for me to play a sexually open character, like Samantha Jones on HBO’s “Sex and the City,” I must have had fabulous sex most of my life,” but, “until three years ago most of my sexual experiences were miserable.” She followed Satisfaction with last year’s Sexual Intelligence, which focuses more on sexual desire than (as she puts it) “the end of the story.”

“Sex and the City” may have affected Cattrall in another way, too. As fans know, the series ended with Samantha finally in a meaningful relationship with a much younger man. Well, after three marriages and divorces starting in 1975 and ending in 2004 (Larry Davis and Andre J. Lyson preceded Levinson), Cattrall herself has discovered the pleasures of dating younger men, recently acknowledging that her beau is Alan Wyse, a Canadian chef 23 years younger than she. “I prefer younger men. In some ways, they are much more open to a woman being stronger and independent than some of the men my age.”

BILL BEUTEL, 75

Longtime anchorman Bill Beutel died on Saturday, March 18th, at his home in North Carolina. He was the face of NY News for over thirty years, the voice that chronicled the modern history of that city. Many consider him the man who set a new standard for evening news, by reporting firsthand news with humility and integrity.

Born in 1930, Beutel began as a radio reporter in his hometown, Cleveland. He made the jump to television in 1962, when he began reporting on ABC News, joined Channel 7 News in 1963, solo anchored briefly, and then moved on to London to serve as ABC Bureau Chief alongside Peter Jennings, covering a spectrum of stories, from Paris Peace talks to civil war in Nigeria. Beutel was an ardent advocate of firsthand, international news coverage.

In 1970, Beutel returned to New York to man the local anchor desk alongside Roger Grimsby and the dynamic pair made "Eyewitness News" a nationally renowned affiliate and New York's leading news broadcast. They established the format of on-air reporting that soon became the standard for evening news. He also co-hosted ABC's "AM America" which became the network's acclaimed "Good Morning America." When he left Channel 7 in 2001, after an extraordinary 38-year run, Beutel had been an anchor for longer than anyone else in New York television.

Eight months after stepping down from the anchor desk, however, Beutel returned to the newsroom to cover New York's greatest tragedy — the terrorists attacks on September 11.

After 9/11, the 70-year old anchorman continued reporting and, while most of his friends were long retired, he was covering the AIDS epidemic in Uganda and behind the lines of the civil war in Sierra Leone, where children were risking their lives hunting diamonds for war-lords.

Mr. Beutel also spent a great deal of time on the East End at his home in Bridgehampton, and hosted events for a plethora of charities, including the American Cancer Society, Southampton Hospital, Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center, Meals on Wheels, the Bridgehampton Historical Society, among many others. He even played in the Artists and Writers benefit softball game in 2000.

After his death, Mayor Bloomberg said, "When Bill Beutel died, we lost a lot of New York. He was a symbol of this city."

Beutel is survived by his wife, Adair, a sister, four children and eight grandchildren.

mites. Way back in 1998, the State of New York even provided a grant to East Hampton to "restore eelgrass beds and combat Phragmites proliferation." In 2000, people tried to pull up the phragmites by their roots — a difficult project because the roots are strong and thick. The few uprooted phragmites returned the next year. In 2003, people argued over pulling up the phragmites by their roots (again) or using a salt-based herbicide. In 2004, the Trustees voted to ban the use of herbicides.

And so the debates continued, and continue today — all the while, the phragmites are still there, proliferating, multiplying and spreading and no doubt laughing at our arrogance. Today's debate centers over whether to blast the phragmites' root system with high pressure hoses, presumably to dislodge the roots, or to vacuum up the phragmites with a machine called the Gobbler. The Gobbler's proponent, one Richard Windels, is also offering to use the Gobbler to vacuum up excess sand, which could then be sold for beach replenishment purposes. The East Hampton Town Trustees want more information on both blasting and vacuuming, so that they can select the most appropriate manner by which to fail in their battle against the phragmites.

Meanwhile, Stephen Spielberg remains Georgica's most visible advocate for removing phragmites through any means necessary. Perhaps he will follow last year's film Munich with a film called Georgica, in which the audience is challenged to think about whether the true terrorists are the phragmites or those who wish to take them out.

Whatever happens, we predict that when the smoke clears, there will still be, well, phragmites.

TWENTYSOMETHING... By David Lion RATTINER

Dog Wash

You would not believe how dirty my dog was. It was horrible.

My family dog, Moon-Light Rattiner, who we like to call Moo for short, was about as dirty as a dog could possibly be. Moo's coat is supposed to be white with brownish tones here and there. He is a Wheaton Terrier. However, for the past month and a half his fur has changed from this color to a solid dark, dirt-like tones mixed in with green blades of grass and pine needles. The bottom fur on his face has been perpetually wet and when he gets into my car, he leaves the stink in it for a week. If he jumps on me while I'm on the couch, I have to shoo him away to avoid getting clumps of dirt on my jeans.

As my buddies Tom and James, said over the weekend, "It's time to clean Moo."

For some reason, Moo seems to enjoy his filth. When I told him that we were going to give him a bath he immediately looked anxious and then made a run for the dog door in the kitchen. "He's running! GET HIM!" I yelled to Tom and James.

Tom tried to catch him between his legs as Moo scrambled, but it was no use. He slipped through like butter. Like lightning, James leaped over the couch and charged for the dog door, throwing his body in front of it to block it. James knew it was the only way Moo could escape the house.

Moo looked at James, begging. Please don't send me into the bathtub, he was saying, communicating to James using dog mental telepathy.

"It'll be all right, Moo. It's for your own good."

I felt terrible grabbing Moo by the collar. I was going through the same emotions that a prison guard must go through as they bring an inmate on death row to the electric chair. Was I really dragging this dog like this?

Maybe we can hold off on giving him a bath for another week.

The domino had already been tipped, however. Tom ran upstairs to the bathroom closet that has all of the shampoo and soap and James had the water in the downstairs bathroom running. Every dog has his day. Poor Moo.

With even more resistance, we got to the front door of the bathroom and looked inside. Moo struggled to get away. But somehow, as gently as we could, the three of us got Moo into the tub. He was shaking from fear, scared out of his mind by the bathtub. "Maybe we should turn on some music," Tom said. "That might calm him down."

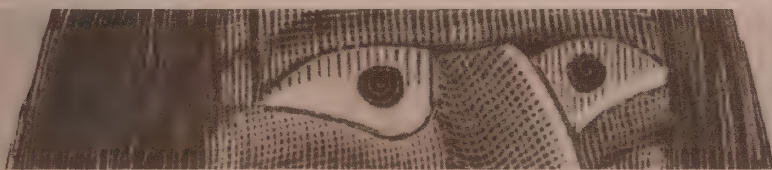

"I think that there is a Rolling Stones CD in the player," I said.

James went into the living room and turned on the CD player. The entire house started booming to the song, "I Can't Get No Satisfaction." I don't think that this calmed down Moo.

Using three kitchen pots, Tom, James and I started dumping water on Moo and scrubbing him down. There were clumps of dirt that simply were not going to come out using soap and water, so I grabbed scissors and very carefully started to cut parts of his coat to get out the dirt. The three of us were moving as fast as possible, trying to get the whole thing over with for Moo's sake.

After several washes and rinses, we turned the water off and let Moo be for a moment. He looked at us, soaking wet. Then without warning, he shook his body vigorously to get the water off of him. "Oh, man!" Tom yelled.

Little droplets of wet dog water started hitting us from all over as the whole bathroom got wet. We grabbed a towel and dried him and ourselves off.

Moo was walking around the house with an attitude after we washed him. It was almost like he was angry that he was clean. I started feeling guilty. I would go over to pet him and he would walk away from me, not giving me the satisfaction.

"It was for his own good, Dave, he'll get over it," James said.

I knew James was right, but there was this big hole inside of me that was filled with guilt. "Let's go get some bacon, cook it and give it to Moo."

I swear my dog understands English. When I said this he started barking and running around the couch, then he hopped onto a chair and began barking happily some more.

"All right, let's go," Tom said.

for him to do that would be sufficient to get his degree. It would involve writing papers. He'd give him four to write. He'd have to read poetry and eighteenth century English novels again. But if he would do that and write passable papers by June, he could be awarded his degree.

"One of the papers involved comparing how William Blake and William Wordsworth viewed the idea of eternity," Florio said. And so he did the work and he handed it in. Pattison pronounced it fine.

Rob had every right to expect to see his name listed as one of those getting his diploma at the commencement in June. But when the list came out, he saw he wasn't on it. Stunned, he tried to call the English department only to find out it wasn't there anymore. Then Florio went to the last remaining Dean at the school, Chuck Hitchcock, to talk to him about it. It would be too late to get the paperwork together for the commencement, Hitchcock said, and furthermore it would all have to be done at CW

Post in Brookville, but Hitchcock could see Rob was owed his degree and he said he'd follow through on it.

"For a while this summer and fall, while I waited," Florio said, "I thought I might be the last person to graduate from Southampton College. The school is closed and vacant. Nobody is there. But Hitchcock told me that the staff at CW Post is making an aggressive effort to get more college graduates for Southampton College, finding others who are just a course or two from their degrees, and if they want, to help them through. He said there are about a hundred of them."

And so it was that, last week, Rob Florio received in the mail a diploma from Southampton College, a degree Cum Laude in English, dated August 14, 2005, suitable for framing. It does not say CW Post Campus of Long Island University. It does not say Southampton Campus or Southampton Center. It is Southampton College.

Meanwhile, someone told me that on the Southampton College website, all the information about the school has been changed. The information is the same. For example, it still says the school was founded in 1963. But now it is all as if it is and always has been SUNY Stony Brook Southampton, which is what this place is about to be. As everybody knows, the land was sold for $35 million to the State College system and the campus is to reopen in September 2006 as part of SUNY Stony Brook, which will bless Southampton with its own and very unique curriculum – environmental studies with a major in Global Warming and Meteorology. Also, Marine Studies.

Rob Florio no longer owns that Lacrosse jacket. But he does have, and is keeping in very good repair, a jacket that says Southampton College, his alma mater. And he intends, from time to time, to wear it proudly.

As for the sheepskin, it is at the framer. When he gets it back, it goes on the wall of his office. He wants to be able to look right at it from time to time.

She also explained that, after "Sex and the City," some men her age may have been intimidated, but younger men were not. "Only the brave apply." Many years ago, Cattrall was engaged to actor Daniel Benzali. She also once dated former Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau.

Kim Cattrall has been an East Hampton resident for many years, frequently attending summer benefits, shopping, strolling along the beach and dining at many of our restaurants. She is often photographed for the summer glossy magazines and this paper. She is devoted to charitable work, having lent her name to many charities, including the Hamptons' Animal Rescue Fund and various gay and lesbian organizations.

But lest anyone worry that all of her charity work leaves her without a sense of fun, rest assured that is not the case. She caused quite a stir a couple of years ago while canoeing in Accabonac Harbor. Noticing a friend of hers on shore (along with strangers), she took off her top and waved.

If you are curious about what you missed, the entire "Sex and the City" series is available on DVD.

The Bank Switcheroo

North Fork Bank Gets Bought By Capital One. What It Means For A North Forker.

By R.B. Stuart

Since moving to New York City in 1989, over a 15-year period each bank I opened an account at has been gobbled up. First there was the Manhattan Savings Bank that changed to the Republic National Bank then finally settled as the HSBC. Not being able to deal with the changes, I decided that I would move to a seemingly stable named bank. I moved to Fleet Bank and Bank of America acquired them.

I had had enough with the surcharges and increase of fees, so three weeks ago I decided to give North Fork Bank a try. They'd been around for years and seemed stable; besides, with a local name like that how could I go wrong? But then, like a monster movie, Capital One gobbled up the $60 billion dollar local North Fork banking giant, without even a burp.....I felt vahclempled. It almost was as if bankers had conspired against me. Even after careful thought on who to bank with, my favorite financial institutions would pull the passbook out from under me each time.

My concerns are the same as the millions of other customers: what will happen to North Fork Bank now that the colossal credit card company Capital One has decided to acquire it?

Well, that instituted a call to North Fork Bank President, Chairman and CEO, John Kanas who's been with the company for 34 years. No one else knows the customers better and how to put our minds at ease than him, the $400 million dollar man.

"Capital One is not a bank, it's a credit card company. What they were attracted to was our customer base as a bank," Kanas informed. "What we will be adding is their credit card division, offering it to our banking customers."

With the new founded capital and wider customer base now in their playing field, Kanas expects North Fork Bank to be much more aggressive and competitive in the New York banking arena. Undoubtedly, what we will miss is the independence of North Fork Bank, and what the consumer will gain is more branches outside of the New York Metropolitan area, New Jersey and Connecticut. The 355 branch locations currently in those areas, will double to include the Texas and Louisiana area.

Since Capital One's $4.9 billion dollar purchase last fall of the Hibernia National Bank will allow them to do so and then later, engulf the entire East Coast. The current 9,000 North Fork Bank employees' will inflate to include the 3,000 employees from Hibernia. Kanas will be responsible for them all and be at the helm of the banking division, answering to only one man, and that is Capital One CEO and founder, Richard Fairbank.

Capital One Bank, a Fortune 500 company, headquartered in McLean, Virginia, was founded in 1988 by Fairbank, based on his belief "that the power of information, technology, testing and great people could be combined to bring highly customized financial products directly to consumers."

Since then, Capital One has emerged as one of America's largest consumer franchises with almost 50 million customer accounts and one of the nation's most recognized brands. Capital One's subsidiaries collectively had $47.9 billion in deposits and $105.5 billion in managed loans outstanding as of 2005.

North Fork Bank, on the other hand, was chartered in 1905 under the name Mattituck Bank and in 1950 changed its name to the North Fork Bank and Trust Company. During the 1950s, three other banks located on the North Fork were merged into North Fork Bank and Trust and it became a commercial bank in 1956. North Fork Bancorp was organized in 1980 and in 1981 acquired North Fork Bank and Trust, a commercial bank operating primarily on eastern Long Island. It may have started out one hundred years ago as a local bank in a small pond, but it hooked a big fish, which had no problem forking over $14.6 billion dollars to own one of the North Fork's landmark institutions. So what will happen to the name that's become part of the Long Island landscape?

"Eventually the name will change. With Capital

North Fork Artist of The Week

Photographer, Patrick Haggerty

By R.B. Stuart

In his 20s, with a Kodak instamatic camera glued to his side, Patrick Haggerty began taking pictures of landscapes and seascapes. "As a child I wanted to be a Forest Ranger because I loved animals and nature.....but that didn't happen. I wasn't ready for college so instead I left high school at 17 and joined the Marine Corp because I wanted to go to Vietnam and fight. But two days before my graduation the war ended," he remembered.

Haggerty was born into a large family of six boys in Bay Shore, Long Island.

Always good with numbers, he went back to school to get his GED then went on to college for accounting. Just shy of a few credits, he instead became a bouncer for local dance clubs and began working as a landscaper, since being close to nature is what he wanted from the very beginning. Then by 25 he moved to the North Fork.

After many years of working for the Parks Department, eight years ago a full time caretaker position opened up at the Horton's Point Lighthouse in Southold. Haggerty landed the job and moved into the lighthouse where he lives year round. With the sea looming outside of every window in his apartment, it took a broken leg and ankle to get him back to taking pictures.

He was at home recuperating in a wheelchair when he received a call from his parents regarding a local newspaper having a photo contest. They encouraged him to submit a photo. So he entered an exterior shot he had taken of the lighthouse during the winter. Unexpectedly, he won first prize. So at 42, he was full steam ahead, submitting to every North Fork contest he could find. He kept winning. He won Best Photo in 2000 - 2003 and 2005. Then in 2004 he won an Outstanding Achievement Award from the International Society of Photographers. Over the last eight years he has exhibited his breathtaking landscapes/seascapes of sunrises and sunsets at many North and South Fork libraries and wineries. How could he not be inspired to shoot at all hours of the day and night when his subject is the majestic beauty of Horton's Point?

Not being able to contain his exuberance about photography, Haggerty said, "I see things people don't see. People are too busy going to work and don't notice they are surrounded by nature and beauty. Everything you look at is like art. Being able to preserve that moment and to later sit down and flip through the catalog of work I've captured on film is everything that I love about photography," he exclaimed.

The challenge is, "There's too many photographers, some shooting digital and others 35 mm. With digital you can change around the image with a computer, but you lose the essence of the moment that a 35 mm captures. People think that they can come to an exhibit and then go out and shoot the same photo you did.....good for them I hope they can, but they don't realize it's still an art," he commented.

Haggerty derives inspiration from color, his flowers throughout the park and nature. "I love the scenery. I know we're overdue for a hurricane, and when it comes I'll be right out there taking pictures," he promised. He admires the work of local photographer Ralph Pugliese Jr.

One day Haggerty hopes to be an internationally known photographer traveling the world taking pictures of beauty and the destruction of nature. He wished he had finished school and continued to college. Otherwise, "I love my job. I like growing things, working hard and giving back to the community. And as long as I have my health, everything's great," he concluded.

Haggerty will be displaying 30 of his photographs in Some of My Best the month of July at the Mattituck-Laurel Library. To view his studio of work or to commission a piece he can be reached at 631-765-6380.

We Are All Very Confused!

LNG, MCFS, AHD, SCWA? Can Someone Tell Us What They All Mean?

By Phyllis Lombardi

I learned the alphabet about as easily as any other child in my first-grade class. Twenty-six letters, right? And I even sang the little tune. After a small struggle, I learned to read and write. Later, during one 1950s summer, I even mastered typing.

So you might agree I have a background that should allow me to read in comfort most English-language North Fork newspapers, including this one. But I can't. I fight a constant battle with acronym/abbreviation/aberration. Every political, social, religious and medical entity seems to find their use necessary. Reporters and columnists dare not use reader-friendly real words. Let me give you some examples from recent issues of North Fork newspapers. There's AHD, CDC, LNG, MCFS. What? What's that you say?

Well, to begin with, where did it all start? Let's go back and blame it on the Democrats. Didn't FDR set us up with CCC, WPA, TVA? (I learned a little history in grade school, too.) Speaking of history, I wince each time I hear or read of traffic on the GWB. That's the George Washington Bridge, please. There's another GWB who elicits an occasional wince, but that's another story.

Ones very aggressive marketing campaign to brand them, no doubt we will change our name to reflect that branding," Kanas explained adding. "Capital One is more aggressive with the way they sell to the consumer and where they cater to. And our commercial customers will get that same service. You'll be pleasantly surprised by their service."

For years Capital One's humorous television com-

Now back to those North Fork initials. HALO, REIT, COS, SCORE. And here's one that's really ugly-looking to me, and frightening, too. SEQRA. Is that a terrorist group, a mutant flu strain, or a steroid of choice? I certainly hope it's not in Cutchogue. Now check out this one. SIG. It most definitely is not a procedure suggested by your gastroenterologist. Rather, it's a reference to a proposed State Inspector General for the New York State Education Department. Poor students. They'll SIG the kids before they graduate.

Oh, I know. Brevity is the soul of wit. Well, I don't really know it. I just believed what my teachers told me. Like Hemingway was a great writer because the guy never met an adjective he liked. I don't believe that stuff any more. Give me some multi-syllable real words.

Allow me to elaborate on just one of the aforementioned, AHD. A few weeks ago a North Fork newspaper made reference to a "floating AHD." I immediately decided never to put even one toe in the Peconic Bay or Long Island Sound this summer. For how could I fight off a floating AHD and race for shore at the same time? And imagine if a school of AHD floated by! Fortunately my panic subsided when I was informed that an AHD is an Affordable merchials touting, "What's in Your Wallet?" brought the appeal of credit card possibilities to the masses...and the debt to go along with it.

As with the Fleet Bank acquisition by Bank of America several years ago, the consumer friendly Boston bank had to go with the Bank of America branding and the red, white and blue logo sprouted up everywhere. As did their penchant for liquidating

Housing District. I'm quite sure AHD was conceived by the newly-appointed DUD group. (That's Discuss Unto Death - and I made up that part.)

Tell me the difference between a PDR and a TDR, a PAC and a PCC. Here's one screaming for attention. HAVA. Go ahead. Cheer it out. HAVA, HAVA, RAH, RAH, RAH. Repeat three times.

This next is not exclusive to North Fork newspapers but is found in them regularly. It's part of the brevity thing. Me, Md, Minn, Mont and Miss, Mo, Mich, Mass. Bit of a mish-mash, don't you think? Such a shame it's necessary to abbreviate our state names. Those words are so lovely, so evocative. I don't think rocky shores and frigid ocean when I read ME. But I do when I read Maine. Those glaciers in Montana. The Maryland crabcakes. You get the idea. We've sold our souls for a mess of letters.

In fairness, there are, in our papers, a few things I do recognize. I know UFO, for example. Some land in my back yard each Spring. Also SCWA. I pay the bills. I'm aware of DVD. We have one but I don't know how to use it.

Enough of this. It's time to put down the paper and start working on my income tax. I'll probably have to mail a check to the IRS.

more green out of its customers by increasing rates and adding new fees, thus losing their once faithful devotees. Will that be in North Fork Bank's horizons? Kanas commented, "We (the North Fork Bank) built this bank by the mistakes of others. And we have learned by their mistakes and won't make the same. And no, there won't be any new rate changes or fees," he concluded. Hallelujah!

OVER THE BARREL...

with Lenn Thompson

An Early Spring Saturday in Wine Country

Every week, I get emails asking for advice on which wineries to visit or wondering which local wines I'm really enjoying. I always find these emails difficult to answer because wine tastes are so individual and personal. My tastes may, and probably are, different from yours.

Yes, I love the floral, spicy-citrus zing of Corey Creek's 2004 Gewürztraminer ($25) but that doesn't mean you will.

In short, every time my wife and I visit wine country, we try to take a different path so that we taste different wines and meet different people. But what's a "typical" winery jaunt?

Last Saturday, we started at Roanoke Vineyards, where we enjoyed chatting with owner Rich Pisacano and sampling his 2003 reds, which were impressive and invitingly complex. Right now, my favorite is the elegant, aromatic, Cabernet Franc-dominated Blend Two ($36) but his Cabernet Sauvignon ($40) and Cabernet Sauvignon-dominated Blend One ($30) have excellent potential as well. Made by Roman Roth of Wolffer Estate, where Rich is vineyard manager, these wines are drinking well now, but will reward those patient enough to cellar them for another 3-7 years.

It was lunchtime by the time we left Roanoke, and we decided against Farmer Bar (4805 Depot Lane, Cutchogue), our favorite spot for a casual lunch of barbecue, sweet potato fries and fried green tomatoes. Instead, we stopped in at the Piping Plover Cafe & Gourmet Market (53345 Main Road, Southold) for a quick bite. We waited half an hour for two cups of soup and two salads, but my Thai beef salad with sweet chili vinaigrette was delicious and I like any place that uses un-ground beef in its chili. Severely under-ripe tomatoes detracted from our salads, however and should have just been left out.

Properly satiated, we stopped in at Bedell Cellars and its sister tasting room at Corey Creek Vineyards next. The wines were good across the board, as I've come to expect from the Bedell team, and I was extremely happy to taste the Bedell Cellars 2001 Reserve Merlot ($30) and Bedell Cellars 2001 Cupola ($30) again. Along with Corey Creek's gewurtz, they highlighted that leg of our tour.

Heading back up to Route 48, we tasted some delectable olive oil in the foyer at Castello di Borghese before heading into the tasting room. Castello di Borghese's 2002 Reserve Pinot Noir ($35) is still among the best local renditions, with supreme balance. I also got my first taste of their Hamptons-priced 2001 Private Reserve ($195 per 1.5L magnum). Arefined, nuanced and pretty wine, I only wish it were even remotely affordable.

To end our early spring Saturday enjoying the North Fork, we attended a launch party at Waters Crest Winery for Waters Crest Winery 2004 Night Watch ($45), a luscious dessert wine made with frozen Gewürztraminer, Riesling and Chardonnay grapes. It is named "Night Watch" because winemaker Jim Waters did just that — watched it all day and night for four full days (without sleep). He's since recovered from sleep deprivation and the fruit of his labor is a rich, intricate dessert wine that is sweet, but with just the right acidity to keep it from being heavy. Coincidentally, the party was catered by the Piping Plover Café, and the duck quesadillas were outstanding — especially with Jim's 2003 Cabernet Franc ($30).

The house is expensive. Your mortgage shouldn't be.

No one has to tell you about the price of a house today. Just look in the newspapers or the window of your local realtor. While a lot of people negotiate to get a good bargain on their new home, a surprising number still don't receive the best deal on the mortgage needed to buy that home.

At Hudson City Savings Bank, we're out to change that. We've been in the mortgage business for 130 years and matching you with the best possible mortgage is our specialty. Among our features are:

- Competitive Rates and Pricing
- Expedited and Convenient Closing Process
- 90 Day No Charge Lock-in

Leave it to the most efficient bank in America to offer better values in the form of competitive mortgage rates and lower closing costs. For more information, stop by any of our branches, call Nancy McCarvill in our Mortgage Center at (631) 727-9630 or visit www.hudsoncitysavingsbank.com.

ART COMMENTARY

STUDENT ARTS FESTIVAL AT GUILD HALL

Part 2

Student art is alive and well at Guild Hall as well as the Parrish Art Museum (the latter featured in last week's "Art Commentary"). In one way, Guild Hall expands the term "art" to include video productions and a play by The Ross School, Julius Caesar. The Parrish Museum's presentation is expansive in another way, including many more schools from a geographic area beyond the Hamptons.

Guild Hall's display of fewer institutions has its distinct advantages, allowing for a more spacious and arresting arrangement of works, thanks to the able efforts of Education Director, Janet Goleas. The student endeavors at Guild Hall serve some of the same purposes that we noticed in the Parrish's exhibition. For example, a focus on self-image and identity was finely executed by Ms. Evans' pupils from East Hampton High School. The Ross School's senior project also featured identity issues, including a particularly striking photograph, "Flesh," by Alexandra Strada. Brittany Schwartz's image of a young boy from Kenya captured an identity crisis as well with both psychological and sociological implications.

While not emphasizing any particular theme, students from Mr. Lieberman's drawing class at East Hampton High School showed real expertise as did Mr. Solow's and Mr. Bartolotto's pupils at Pierson High School.

This year's prize-winning videos were the best we've seen so far (which is not to say that last year's works were lacking: they were not). Perhaps the current students had more money to work with. Their technical expertise was also more evident. We can't resist adding, however, that one way to get to Hollywood or enter the Independent market is following an old rule: when in doubt, "edit, edit, edit." Meaning: make the work shorter. And remember that the last shot should be the most visually potent and meaningful.

Regardless of the few professorial suggestions, the videos were quite remarkable, especially the documentary by Alex van Boer of The Ross School.

Work by Patrick Harden, EH High School

His Soil and Sand, which won The Hamptons International Film Festival Award, chronicled the changing history of Sagaponack and its recent incorporation as a village. It's an important work, deserving a longer version (No, it didn't need shortening.)

Alana Perino's Honorable Mention, Confection, was technically sophisticated (including the sound mix), the plot succinct and creative. Hats off to Ms. Perino's advisors at Mattituck High School.

Rabit, by Nora Biscotti of Mattituck High School, was also astounding for its digital animation. We can imagine that computer artist Carol Hunt, one of the video competition judges, particularly liked this work.

The art show will be on view at Guild Hall until April 26.

HONORING THE ARTIST: ADAM D. SMITH

HONORING THE ARTIST, MARCH 31, 2006: ADAM D. SMITH

Q: This week's cover shows a strong sense of place, meaning a local setting. Can we assume you grew up on Long Island?

A: Yes, that's right. I grew up in Port Jefferson; my family had a boat, so I was exposed to things like beaches and sunsets at an early age.

Q: What was your art training like? Did you take lessons as a child?

A: When I was younger, I didn't get any special training. When I graduated from high school, I went to Syracuse University and studied illustration. I realized that it was going to be hard to get a job in illustration, however. It's very competitive. Artists who had jobs before the popularity of computers had it easier. Now it's all computers; if you need an illustration, it's easy to access one already drawn.

Q: You had to learn about computers when you got your first professional job, I imagine.

A: Yes. That was at a graphics company in Old Westbury. After that I got a job in Westhampton.

Q: I assume you learned to combine your illustration background with computer graphics. First, how did your formal training help you do that?

A: Many courses that I took at Syracuse were helpful in computer graphics, like color theory, art history and composition. They all served as a foundation. I have learned to be more creative when I'm using Photoshop, for example, putting more of a human touch on my work.

Q: But to be the most creative, you continue to do your oil paintings.

A: Yes. I enjoy seeing other people's reaction to my work. I like making people feel they could just walk into my painting. I create images of places; I don't tell stories. I hope they might realize the beauty of what they're seeing.

Q: I know you work from your own material, from photographs you take first. How does photography compare to paintings in your mind?

A: In paintings, you can see some insignificant detail that you can't find in a still picture. But photographs are still important to me; I often develop a painting from a photographic composite.

Q: Are there places you'd like to paint, not just from the local area?

A: Yes, I have done some tropical scenes from St. John in the Caribbean. And I'd like to do more scenes from Maine. I really like the Northeast coast. I've also thought about going to the West coast, mainly Seattle, to paint some scenes.

Q: You really love the water and don't ever want to be too far from it, especially Long Island.

A: Yes, when you grow up here, you learn to appreciate the diversity and the beauty. I'm really attached to this place.

Dave Evans MINI - MOVIE REVIEWS

ATL

Rashad (Tip Harris) is a teenager carrying the weight of the world after the death of his parents leaves him squarely responsible for his younger brother Ant (Evan Ross). Against the backdrop of South Atlanta, he and his friends tackle numerous problems both romantic and familial. With a script from Antwone Fisher this is a sadly rare example of smart drama for young people.

Ice Age: The Meltdown

A welcome return for the prehistoric mammals of one of Pixar's only true contenders. The Ice Age is over and the frozen landscape is melting much to the alarm of the many celebrity-voiced animals (Queen Latifah, Dennis Leary and Jay Leno to name but a few). Even Ray Romano is bearable, hidden inside a CG woolly mammoth.

Basic Instinct 2

Fourteen years since the original comes the sequel that perhaps only Sharon Stone has been waiting for. The action has moved to London in the hope of acquiring some elusive European sheen to the soft-core antics of murderess Catherine Tramell, but otherwise it's business as usual. Smutty, dumb and laughably unsexual.

Slither

This week's dose of schlock horror is directed by a true veteran, James Gunn of Tromeo and Juliet infamy. Here a town is overrun by an alien plague which transforms people into zombies and worse. It's uninspiring nonsense but done with great gusto and for those crazed fans of Joss Whedon's Firefly and Serenity, a chance to see Nathan Fillion's Mal in a different setting.

Inside Man

It's sad to watch Jodie Foster slip from one of Hollywood's most powerful actresses to the competent star of slick but drab thrillers such as Panic Room or Flightplan. This is at least an improvement on those, with a strong cast (Denzel Washington and the ever excellent Clive Owen) and fascinating director (Spike Lee, making perhaps his least overtly political film yet).

Stay Alive

Another week rolls around accompanied, as always, by the sounds of photogenic but brain-dead teenagers slaughtered en masse. This batch find themselves dying in real-life as they fail in the videogame of the film's title, with the remaining few realizing they must defeat the Blood Countess or face the ultimate consequence. Fodder played by Sophia Bush of "One Tree Hill" and the diminutive Frankie Muniz.

Larry the Cable Guy: Health Inspector

Self-styled, redneck comedian Larry the Cable Guy stars in this imaginatively titled romp. On the job and signed up with a straight-laced buddy figure played by Iris Bahr (seen last year in "Curb Your Enthusiasm"), Larry has to bend the rules every which way to bring dirty restaurateurs to their knees. Dreadful and akin to snobbery in its conception of good ole' down-home poverty.

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood in The Hamptons

Recently re-released, more widely than just New York and Los Angeles, following its showing at last fall's New York Film Festival, the racially-charged French production Caché (translates as "hidden") has been kept under wraps in the wake of the Paris riots which occurred shortly thereafter. Withholding the film was a pity because viewers raved about the film. It had won best director honors at Cannes for its Austrian auteur Michael Haneke and reviewers were quickly adding it to their year's Top 10 list. Caché is wonderfully wrought. It deals with the other terrorism – psychological terrorism – as opposed to explicit, explosive terrorism. Mr. Haneke embroiders his terrorizing tapestry with pin-pricking delicacy and the weighty, ticking bomb-under-the-table Hitchcockian suspense sharpened brutally by his wicked sadism. It wrings the lives of an above-average family with excruciating moments of remembrance, conscience, and realization which are not actually shared with the audience. Haneke never tells who the "terrorist" is. If you are sharp of eye, you may catch a clue or two, but don't allow your assumptions any real credit. The director would deny any of it.

The film opens as meanly and as near sullen in style as you are likely to expect if you've seen Haneke's other intellectually sado-masochistic films. The opening is a typical movie location with a wide opening shot of a narrow Parisian street featuring an ordinary house. It is static and is held for ages. Eerily one can feel the presence of another viewer for the camera does not enter the house as expected. Darned if you aren't watching a surveillance video. Now, we have the terrible feeling we are abetting a voyeur and, more awful – aren't we the Peeping Toms?

The audience becomes complicit in the violation of the family living in the building when the family receives the first video of themselves. Someone is spying on them. Who could be doing such a thing? And, why? They are simply a typical bourgeois family. He's the very popular host of a book chat show on TV. She has a good position in a book-publishing firm. Georges and Anne have a sweet son, age 12. They live a tasteful, well-balanced life. They are privileged. What have they done? As the anonymous videotapes continue to arrive at their doorstep they try to reason what the intruder wants. Soon, the nameless threats become more graphic. Childish drawings are sent. The images become more personal, disgustingly depicting blood gushing from a child's mouth. Georges refined literary mind turns to his childhood for answers, as he becomes more agitated, convinced the tormentor knows him. He returns to his mother's house in the provinces to question her about his youth. He relates his memory about an Arab boy called Majid as a dream he's had. What had happened was that Majid's parents had worked for his family and in 1961 they went to Paris attending an anti-colonial demonstration. There, they were killed along with 200 others by the police. Georges' parents wanted to adopt young Majid but 6-year-old Georges prevented it by means of lies and malicious behavior. We are now aware of Georges' buried bigotry and unmasked issues of race and class emerge as the intellectual center Georges and Ann have maintained spins out of control.

At Caché's halfway point we're deciding that the French must pay for the sins in North Africa and with the immigrants. Wait – the director is still constructing an elaborate web of hints spun and then blown away as Georges confronts the grown Majid and his son in a ramshackle apartment. The latest video had provoked the confrontation. As Majid and son vehemently deny any association with the tapes and drawings, Georges' anger mounts. To relate more to you now or tell you of particular clues to look for would spoil your finding your own solution in this important film, hidden beneath the lurid cover of a Mystery Thriller. (Take notice: though very subtle, Caché contains a very brief, but jolting violent scene.)

The director, at a press conference, said he'd heard at least 5 plausible explanations of the mystery. He claims he has not created any definitive resolution – deliberately. However, he has certainly gotten absolutely great performance from Daniel Auteuil and Juliette Binoche and from audiences, as well.

Guy Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/writer/director of award-winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at major film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmys and various film festivals. He is assisted by Sarah Halsey.

Entertainment In Town

review: entertaining mr. sloane...by gordin & christiano

Joe Orton's first major play, the cult classic Entertaining Mr. Sloane, is a wonderfully perverse comedy of bad manners that makes a piercing comment on the moral decay of society that seems even timelier today than when it premiered across the pond in 1964. Shocking back then, the dark story poked fun at the pretensions and hypocrisy of British society and won the London Drama Critic's Best Play Award. The play was a short lived failure on Broadway in 1965, but was subsequently given a flawless revival off Broadway in 1981, starring a menacing Maxwell Caulfield opposite a magnificent Barbara Bryne in what was an unforgettable performance.

Scott Ellis has staged the current Roundabout Theatre Company revival as a farce played at a fast, even manic pace that has more in common with a "Saturday Night Live" skit than the truth inherent in the playwright's wittily elegant text. While occasionally amusing and sometimes outright funny, none of the evening's proceedings serve the playwright. His script unfolds as a nuanced sexual power struggle between Kath (Jan Maxwell), and her brother Ed (Alex Baldwin) for the attentions of the lusty Mr. Sloane (Chris Carmack).

In Mr. Orton's world, grotesque behavior is treated as normal, and he has created a huge inconsistency between what's being said and what's actually done. To remove the duality, as well as the danger, is to rob the playwright of his outrageous intentions and render the play lifeless without any of its multi-faceted psychological truths.

The story is set in a housing development that was never finished, next door to what has now become a garbage dump that is symbolic of the character's rotting behavior. The three main characters, motivated by their own single minded interests, struggle amongst themselves for the upper hand. Kath, a dowdy, middle-aged landlady, brings home the sexy Mr. Sloane as her new boarder. At first she seems to take a motherly interest in him, but we quickly discover her hidden desire to bed the handsome stranger. Her father, Kemp, played by Richard Easton in the evening's finest performance, recognizes Sloane and is aware of his secret homicide. Enter Kath's brother Ed, a businessman of uncertain real estate ventures, who pays for the house and takes a fancy to Sloane. With the triangle established, the journey to the evening's conclusion is ripe with bizarre events, atrocious behavior, and upsetting elements, but Mr. Ellis has taken the dark out of the comedy with rather unsatisfactory results. We sit back thinking what twittering idiots and feeling nothing.

Chris Carmack, a former Abercrombie model, who is best known for his television work on "The O.C." makes attractive eye candy, displaying a youthfully chiseled body adorned with blond good looks. His Mr. Sloane is charismatic, but unfortunately too cute and willing without the necessary element of danger. He proves himself, however, to be a competent theatre actor, who will assuredly become better in time.

Alec Baldwin playing the suave composed Ed, who tempts Mr. Sloane with worldly delights, delivers a silly self-indulgent performance that constantly makes comments on his character's action. Mr. Baldwin is undeniably a gifted performer and this is, indeed, a dazzling display, but it is broad parody bordering on schtick, not a nuanced performance built on the truth.

The talented Jan Maxwell is unfortunately miscast. She is much too stylish and her performance is so over the top that Kath becomes a ridiculous fool, not the delusional pathetic creature that she actually is.

Entertaining Mr. Sloane established Joe Orton as one of England's most celebrated playwrights. His career was brief; he was bludgeoned to death at the age of 36 by his estranged lover. His play still resonates with complexities that are both startling and funny, but nothing onstage comes close to Mr. Orton's powerful text, and we feel nothing for these cartoon characters. Joe Orton, may you rest in peace, you deserve much more.

Entertaining Mr. Sloane opened at the Laura Pels Theatre, 111 West 46th Street just west of Sixth Avenue on May 21, 2006. Tickets are available by calling Roundabout Ticket Services at 212-719-1300, online at www.roundabouttheatre.org or the theatre box office.

When In Manhattan...BY OLIVER PETERSON

Art of a City

About once or twice a year I like to bring you something a little different from the go-see-this-go-buy-that mentality and encourage a simple and sometimes ponderous day in the greatest city in the world. We've been here before. I've told you of my random strolls through Downtown without spending a dime, the beauty of the urban winter, or embracing the seasonal shift as our hectic summers pass and we once again find ourselves seeking the pleasures of a Manhattan weekend.

A lot of important art shows have been popping up recently – Rauschenberg, Munch, the Whitney Biennial, Goya at the Frick, to name a few – but what strikes me is not just the great exhibits, but also that New York is such a fantastic city for art in general. Between the Hamptons and the five boroughs, there are hundreds, if not thousands, of artists working seriously, creating expressions of individual life experience, and interpreting their surroundings. So rather than looking in on Soho galleries or visiting artists' studios this week, take a day to consider your life experience – spend the time understanding your surroundings. There's a lot to love and think about out here, but the city has its own indelible art history. Go for a walk, see the sights, remember what's come before, make peace with what's here now, and look out into that scary, thrilling, and mysterious future. If you're an artist, or even if you simply own a camera, try documenting what you see.

I would never be so bold as to instruct my readers as to what should be meaningful or beautiful to them, but I will talk about some places I love and a few more that have inspired some of the greatest artists throughout history.

"Union Square," charcoal on paper, by Oliver Peterson

Two weeks ago I wrote about Union Square and the weekend farmer's market that is always rich with wonderful goods and crowds of eager shoppers. This is a perfect place to sit down in the grass with a pad and charcoal and sketch the cityscape, the people, and the various booths with a cornucopia of tasty delights. Photographers might also find it to be an interesting change from the routine city, where the crowds are usually pushing onward.

Farther south, the Brooklyn Bridge has been a staple of New York's visual art since it was built in 1883. It inspired Frank Lloyd Wright, Walt Whitman, and Georgia O'Keefe. One of the most famous paintings and photographs of our neighboring metropolis is O'Keefe's 1949 oil, "Brooklyn Bridge." In an earlier (1939) and slightly more cubist painting, Joseph Stella painted an almost identical view of the famous structure, one of many bridges he painted in his lifetime. The Brooklyn Bridge begs to be documented and savored, but, if nothing else, one can walk across and take in the view – another luscious treat.

Edward Moran and Childe Hassam painted some excellent views in New York. Moran's "Statue of Liberty Enlightening the World" (1886) is a prime example of the 19th century aesthetic, complete with smoke, boats and American flags flapping in the East Coast winds. Hassam is probably best known for his visions of flags waving above the streets of our city, but his images of Manhattan are numerous and diverse, ranging from the expansive scene down to the individual portrait. It's a good way to approach what your world has to offer.

Of course, not every artist represents the city. Some use the streets and paths and buildings as the canvas instead. Look, for example, at Christo and Jeanne-Claude's "Gates." True to their style, they filled Central Park with saffron colored arches with flowing fabric. It was art to be truly experienced, walked through, and enjoyed on an interactive and personal level. Basquiat and Haring did the same in the 80s when they covered the city in their personal iconography. While it led to fame and fortune for them, I'm not suggesting vandalism is a wise choice.

Get off the Jitney or emerge from Penn Station and look around. The East River, Washington Square, Central Park, the Flatiron Building, Times Square – they all have a deep history of representation. Maybe start there, then find what matters to you. The city is alive with art. You just haven't made it yet.

TAKE A HIKE WITH KEN KINDLER

Fun With Ticks and ATVs

Last Saturday I had planned to meet Elina from the Pine Barrens Society (PBS) and my friend John to preview the next work outing planned for the Sarnoff Preserve. Unfortunately, I was late and missed them. A recent PBS work party had created a 2-mile loop trail by using a DEC trail to cut across a meandering portion of the Paumanok Path. On April 2, the PBS will be sponsoring a work outing to trim back this trail. This will reduce the chance of picking up ticks while walking it. Call Elina (631-369-3300) if you wish to participate in a PBS trail work outing. If you want to walk the new loop, you can find it at the DEC parking area on the west side of CR 104, 2 miles north of the Riverhead Circle.

To protect against ticks, wear light colored clothing and tuck your pant bottoms into your socks. I often wear tight woven support socks over my regular socks to protect against the small larval ticks of the late summer. Most ticks wait on ends of grass or low shrubs for passers-by. When you brush against the plants they're on, you pick up an uninvited passenger. Consistently check for them. Even tiny deer ticks are visible against light colored fabric; pick them off and flick them back into the woods. Ticks don't bite or sting, and the process of attaching themselves takes a while, so you can hold them between your fingers without fear. Generally, once ticks get on you, they will travel upward until they hit an obstruction. That's why not tucking your pants into your socks will allow them to travel up your legs and attach at your underwear or beltline. I usually spot them before they get above my knees. When I think ticks might be on my clothes, I put my clothes in a dryer on high for 20 minutes. After every hike and work outing I check my whole body and feel for any new small bumps. If I find an attached tick, I remove it. Grab the tick with tweezers as close to the skin as possible and pull straight out. Once these precautions become a routine, they take very little effort and are very effective. Ticks can carry Lyme disease or other illnesses; if you are in the woods often, a periodic blood test is a recommended practice.

Having failed to connect with my friends on Saturday, I decided to walk on my own. I drove south on CR 104. Just before reaching Sunrise Highway, I turned left onto Pleasure Drive. After 100 yards the road expands into a parking area with a guardrail. I followed ATV tracks around the guardrail. The LIPA right-of-way (ROW) is a major road for illegal ATV use and offers a throughway into much of the preserved open space. The ROW crosses Pleasure Drive here so there is a network of ATV trails nearby. I decided that I would walk some of the most heavily used ATV trails and see where they might lead. At first, I followed a couple of loops that ran between the Paumanok Path and the ROW. The erosion caused by illegal ATV use is extensive. Ground wires and footings for the electrical towers are exposed and deep trenches have been cut into the Paumanok Path. I walked the ROW a short distance until I reached an unmarked straight boundary road, running north-south, parallel to and east of Pleasure Drive. The churned-up tread attested to its popularity with the ATV crowd. Before the advent of the Long Island trails initiative, boundary roads, firebreaks and ROWs were the common hiking routes into the woods.

I walked this road approximately 1.5 miles and started looking for a trail that would take me west across Pleasure Drive. The first few ATV trails I followed west went up to a driveway or through a fence into residential property. Finally, I found a path that cut between two properties and took me across the road and into the informal trail system on the west side of Pleasure Drive. I followed these trails into some lovely wetlands along a looping path that headed north, came around and then headed south. Using my compass, I walked an ATV trail south to C. R. 104 where it ran along the road shoulder and took me back to my car at Pleasure Drive.

With all the formal trails now built by the trails groups it is no longer necessary to utilize the land management roads, but it is fun to use them to create your own walking excursions.

to help a charitable organization, the Epiphany Community School. They had an auction and parents bid for a birthday party at 74th Street Magic in New York, with the special feature of having my column cover it. Well, it was won by Barbara Sampson for her daughter, Alexis, and last weekend we went to the birthday party at the gym. I didn't want to just cover the party, I wanted to attend, so I got the chance to go on the trampoline, tumble and do other cool fun things that got my appetite up for my favorite part of any party – eating some cake. So Happy Fourth Birthday Alexis, and thanks to her mom for her generous bid to the organization.

Race Against Time

I don't know what this says about me, but my two favorite Food Network shows involve a race against time. They are "Iron Chef America" and Rachel Ray's "30-Minute Meals."

"Iron Chef" started in Japan and was later imported to America with only minor changes. The show takes place in Kitchen Stadium, which is very much like what I imagine Heaven to be. Each half of Kitchen Stadium – the halves are identical mirror images of one another – contains everything a professional chef can possibly need. Just to name a few of the appliances, the Kitchen contains two six-burner ranges plus a separate wok burner and separate convection oven, a professional fry machine, a high-tech rice cooker, a blast chiller and a professional ice-cream maker.

Each of the two identical Kitchens also has a pantry section, which contains gorgeous produce; all kinds of rice and grains, oils and vinegars, and every spice imaginable. To give a sense of how precisely these pantries are set up, the strawberries allocated to each pantry are exactly the same in number and size. Finally, each Kitchen also contains three sinks, three cutting boards, dozens of knives, and all the pots, pans, mixing bowls, and strainers anyone could desire.

On each show, one of four Iron Chefs will cook against one challenger. The Iron Chefs are the Italian-inspired Mario Batali, the French/Mediterranean-inspired Cat Cora, the Southwestern-inspired Bobby Flay, and the Japanese-inspired Masaharu Morimoto. (Morimoto first came to the attention of American viewers as one of the Iron Chefs on the original Japanese show.) The challengers are chefs from all over the country. As the show becomes more popular, more and more chefs want to play the game. This includes Sag Harbor's own Ralph "Fat Ralph" Pagano (of "Hell's Kitchen" fame), who will challenge Flay on April 30th at 9 p.m. (the show will repeated May 1st at noon).

At the beginning of each episode, the challenger picks one of the Iron Chefs to complete against. Then, the master of ceremonies announces the secret ingredient for the show. The secret ingredient can be anything – a particular meat, poultry, fish, vegetable, spice, anything. In one recent episode, the MC revealed a table filled with eggplants of every color and variety. Another episode featured a tank of live catfish. Whatever the ingredient, the two chefs (and their sous chefs) have one hour to use that ingredient to create and cook five different dishes.

At the end of the hour, with the dishes completed and plated, the chefs present their creations to a panel of three judges. As the judges sample each dish, they tell the chef what they liked, or didn't like, about it. Then, after they have tasted all ten dishes, they rate the two chefs on taste, originality and presentation. The chef with the highest score wins. The dishes always look amazing, although many a chef has lost because of an overly-creative use of the ice cream machine. Suffice it to say that fish ice cream is no more popular with the judges than it would be with you.

The show is exhilarating. Watching the masters create five dishes, based solely on their experience and technique, is amazing.

If you told me to create five dishes around eggplant over the course of an hour, I would first need to spend at least a dozen hours going through cookbooks and the Internet trying to find recipes that appealed to me. And beyond being in awe of the talent, I also enjoy watching the dishes come together. It is nerve-wracking as the clock ticks down and there appears to be a melee of disconnected activities in the kitchen – but it all suddenly comes together at the end.

Iron Chef has become such a cultural phenomenon that amateur chefs all around the country hold their own Iron Chef competitions. The rules will be modified a bit, depending on the extent of the kitchen and ingredients on hand. Perhaps only two dishes will be prepared, or perhaps the players will be given time to shop as well as cook. I once attended an Iron Chef party in an amazing Manhattan loft with a kitchen reminiscent of Kitchen Stadium. The secret ingredient was blood oranges. It was great fun.

Moving from "Iron Chef" to Rachel Ray's "30-Minute Meals" is somewhat a shift from the sublime to the ridiculous, but only because Rachel Ray seems like such a dork. Even so, her show is very practical for home cooks with little time. Each week, she showcases a complete yet simple meal, which she makes in real time during the show. There are no TV tricks here. We watch her take the ingredients and mixing bowls out of the refrigerator and pantry, we watch her prepare the food for cooking and then cook it, and we watch her plate the food at the end. The only part of the process we miss is the work she does during the commercial breaks, but she always explains what happened. ("I finished chopping the onions and put them in the sauté pan.") While "Iron Chef" is sport, "30-Minute Meals" is useful, whether you are eating alone, with a loved one, with a family or company.

Actually, I do watch "30-Minute Meals" for sport. Just as I get caught up in "Iron Chef" as the clock ticks down, I become entirely engrossed in "30-Minute Meals," as I wonder how Ray is going to pull it all together before the show ends. And even though watching these shows makes me entirely verklempt, I always go back to them.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

Joseph Realmuto, executive chef of Nick & Toni's restaurant in East Hampton, prepared a glorious Slow Food sold-out dinner for a joyous coterie of 70 diners. Slow food is an association that promotes food and wine with a mission to defend our world's heritage of agricultural biodiversity.

The group hovered around the raw bar devouring local Mecox oysters and Three Mile Harbor Littleneck clams. Animated conversations didn't keep guests from nibbling on Nick & Toni's famous wood grilled pizzas before being seated to enjoy a delectable dinner beginning with a superb salad of greens and garlic chips from Quail Hill Farms in Amagansett. The lamb ragu – the lamb from a small farm in Vermont – served over a creamy polenta made from roasted and ground corn and buckwheat from a mill in the Carolinas, was divine. Because of the high quality of the chickens from Iacono Farms in East Hampton almost nothing had to be done to the entrée of French chicken breasts. A fortified jus made from the bones and leg meat and a colorful mélange of local baby vegetables from Satur Farms in Cutchogue accompanied the chicken and served chefs wishes for the true flavors to come through – and indeed it did. Catapano Farms in Southold supplied the goat cheese in pastry chef Molly Harding's luscious cake garnished with honey grapefruit sorbet with honey from Hampton Honey, with hives around the North and South Forks.

Chef Realmuto captured the essence of Slow Food by featuring the best of local products which is what Slow Food is all about – celebrating the land and sea that surrounds us. Bravo!

QUAIL HILL FARM'S SPRING GREENS WITH ROASTED GARLIC VINAIGRETTE

Serves 4 - 6

4 - 6 cups farm fresh mixed greens, washed and spin-dried

For the vinaigrette

1/3 cup extra-virgin olive oil
3 fat cloves garlic, sliced paper thin
Coarse (kosher) salt
2 - 3 tablespoons red wine vinegar
2 teaspoons Dijon mustard
2-3 cloves roasted garlic, peeled*

1. Warm oil in a small saucepan and add garlic. Cook over medium-low heat until garlic is lightly golden and crisp, about 3 minutes. Remove garlic chips with slotted spoon and drain on paper towels. Sprinkle with salt.

2. Pour oil into a small mixing bowl and, when cool, stir in mustard and roasted garlic. Mash the garlic in the bowl with a fork and slowly whisk in the red wine vinegar.

3. Dress salad greens with enough dressing to coat the leaves. Divide equally on salad plates and top with garlic chips for serving.

* Place whole cloves (make extra – they keep) in a foil packet and drizzle with olive oil. Enclose packet and roast in a 325 degree oven for 30-40 minutes until cloves are tender. Squeeze the sweet pulp from skin when ready to use.

SPRING LAMB STEW

Chef Realmuto's timely stew.

Serves 6-8

1/4 cup oil
4 tablespoons unsalted butter
6 - 7 pound leg of lamb, boned and cut into 2-inch dice
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
1 large onion, diced

1 leek, cleaned and diced
1 parsnip, peeled and diced
4 sprigs fresh thyme sprigs
10 cloves roasted garlic
2 cups dry white wine
2 cups lamb broth (made from the bones)

1. In a large Dutch sauté pan heat oil and butter over medium-high heat. When oil begins to ripple, add meat in batches, season with salt and pepper, and brown on all sides. Add vegetables and toss to coat with the meat. Add white wine and broth and bring to a boil. Reduce heat to a simmer, and cook with cover ajar about 2 hours on medium-low heat until meat is tender, stirring occasionally. Taste to adjust seasoning as necessary.

ANSON MILL'S CREAMY POLENTA

Serves 6

2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
1 small onion, finely chopped
1 cup polenta, preferably Anson Mills
1 1/2 cups milk
1 1/2 cups chicken stock, homemade or low sodium canned

2 tablespoons freshly grated Parmesan cheese
2 tablespoons mascarpone cheese
4 tablespoons unsalted butter
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper

1. Heat oil in a 3-4 quart saucepan, add onions and sauté until onions are translucent, about 2-3 minutes. Add milk and chicken stock and bring to a boil. Adjust heat to low and whisk in the polenta in a slow steady stream – important to add polenta very slowly. Stir continuously for 30-40 minutes until mixture thickens. Stir in Parmesan, mascarpone and butter. Season with salt and pepper and stir to mix. Serve hot with lamb stew.

GREAT FOOD IN A COMFORTABLE SETTING

Dining in the Hamptons

Say what you will about Riverhead's future with the new $140 million revitalization project and whatnot; for me, the town came alive last Wednesday when I sat down at Tweeds Buffalo Bar and Restaurant for a little bull session with a few friends.

The decor is great. Leather and wood. Classic comfort - like a gentleman's club or a trophy room from the twenties. The kind of place Hemingway would have liked to pull up a chair for a drink, some talk and a beautiful cut of meat. The tin ceilings are original, the mahogany bar came from the 1893 Chicago Columbian World's Fair, and perched in the corner is the last bison ever shot by Teddy Roosevelt in the Dakota Badlands. Tweeds is authentic. I could go on about exposed brick walls, the fireplace, and the fact that it is the longest continually-run bar in Riverhead, even surviving the dreaded 18th Amendment, but then I'd never make it to the food, which really deserves some attention.

You can call it "cornering a niche market," but the fact is, bison is good meat. And when prepared properly, as executive chef Jeffrey Trujillo and chef Peter Psyllos do, it can go head to head with any cut of beef on the market. Case in point, Carpaccio of Bison Tenderloin. Served with a light truffle oil and freshly shaved Parmesan, this appetizer has such a unique, slightly sweet taste that you'll be reaching for the second piece as the first one melts in your mouth. A nice complement to this is the homemade duck pate. The texture is lovely and when served with one of the three fruit based relishes accompanying it, the combination is an intricately layered first course.

If you're looking for a more substantial appetizer the Grilled Bison with Dijon Horseradish Sauce is the tops. But if you're not exactly ready for the bison appetizer or have ordered it for dinner, another option for a starter is the Crab Cakes. Filled with lump crabmeat and a thin crust, they are a delight, only made better when combined with the accompanied citrus sauce. We also tried the night's special, Harry's Salad,

Tweeds

17 East Main Street
Riverhead, NY
631-208-3151

which was a combination of bacon, blue cheese, chilled shrimp and asparagus over mixed baby field greens, topped with a Champagne vinaigrette. Nothing beats bacon and crumbled blue cheese. Other appetizers that caught my eye, but I didn't have time (or space) to try, were the Smoked Local Duck with Mint Pineapple Relish and the Grilled Bison Kebab.

To change the night up a little, for the next course we tried the raw bar. Both the Little Neck Clams and the oysters were rather nice. Served light and cool, with a Mignonette Sauce, it was a slightly different take on oysters, but the sauce added just enough punch and wasn't overwhelming.

For dinner, electing to go with our knowledgeable waitress, Alyda's, suggestion, I ordered the Tweeds Bison and wasn't disappointed. It was served with a wild mushroom cognac cream sauce and scallion mashed potatoes and I was seriously impressed with every aspect of this dish. The meat was tender and the sauce simply blew me away. Another bison dish we tried was the Grilled Bison Rib-Eye, which is one hefty dish.

The Aquebogue Duck Two Ways, served as a seared breast and leg Confit, was also quite a meal. The portion was large and delightful. The skin was crisp and packed with flavor while the meat stayed moist. Served with a black raspberry sauce - it was almost like candy.

For those poor folks out there that do not eat red meat, Tweeds hasn't forgotten about you. They offer a Baked Salmon with grain mustard glacage, Sesame Seared Sashimi Tuna, and Vegetable Napoleon.

Everyone else was too full for dessert, but I forged ahead, taking on the key lime pie with a full head of steam. The balance of tart and sweet, with a clean finish really capped off one hell of a meal. Owner Ed Tuccio has a wonderful restaurant on his hands. If Riverhead is the gateway to the East End, then Tweeds is the gateway to Riverhead. It's a must stop for anyone looking for fresh, rich food that is inventive and utterly satisfying. Like I said, it's authentic.

Tweeds Buffalo Bar and Restaurant is located at the John J. Sullivan Hotel, 17 East Main Street, Riverhead. They are open for lunch and dinner 11 a.m. til closing. Call 631-208-3151.

So What Can I Eat?

By Silvia Lehrer

If you're interested in health, and this concern appears to be more evident than ever before, there is a wealth of material to guide you in a new book titled, So What Can I Eat? How to Make Sense of the New Dietary Guidelines for Americans and Make Them Your Own (Wiley, 2006) by Elisa Zeid, M.S.R.D. with Ruth Winter, M.S. Elisa Zeid is a registered dietician and national spokesperson for the American Dietetic Association.

In So What Can I Eat, Elisa offers sound advice – not as a restrictive diet, but choices for a healthful lifestyle of eating while not depriving yourself of foods that you love. The chapter on Dietary Guidelines provides you with a roadmap to steer your own course through variety, proportionality and moderation, and “steps to a healthier you.” There's no banter here on low-fat and low-carb, but an emphasis on foods and beverages that are the most important sources of nutrients and healthful compounds. A simplistic MyPyramid graphic reminds you to improve your intake of key foods such as fruits, vegetables and whole grains not for the short term, but for life. Lots of daily activity is encouraged and Zeid offers advice on how to make it a permanent part of your life.

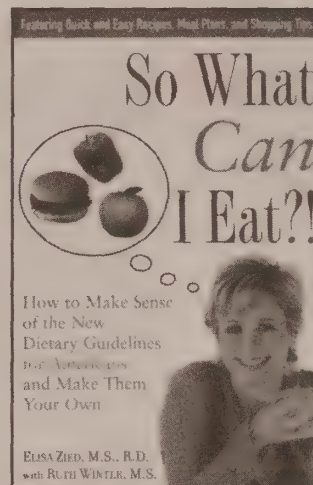

Upon introducing you to the new Dietary Guidelines, Elisa is at your side with help towards making some positive behavioral changes in your dietary and physical habits. For those seriously interested in making these life changes, Elisa asks you to commit eighteen days – “just a blip of time in the context of life – to create an eating plan based on your unique nutrient and calorie needs, lifestyle, food preferences, and, let's not forget budget.” A chart to track daily food and fitness is included to help you along this journey.

The section on Supermarket Strategies warns of the “subtle influences around you when supermarket shopping.” I found this particularly valuable since most shoppers are not aware of product positioning. For instance, “slotting” is the practice of paying for shelf space. “Paying for shelf space has become part of the everyday cost of doing business for thousands of grocery stores and their suppliers.” Fees can be as high as $25,000 per item to position products in a way to make you buy more. That's fine if the products are the nutrient packed foods encouraged by the Dietary Guidelines. Just be aware that from product positioning to store layout every effort is made to control your behavior as a shopper.

Learning to read food labels, which provide you with nutritional content facts, is essential no matter what your current strategies are for losing or maintaining weight. This is carefully explained in So What Can I Eat? Elisa goes on to suggest salt substitutes, finding the hidden sugar, sources of saturated fat, the top sources of trans fat and even provides you with the “Ultimate Grocery Store Shopping List.”

In Elisa's “Best Bets for Breakfast” she points out how important it is to get a healthful start to the day. “Breakfast is one of the best times to eat whole grains, fruits and milk, three of the food groups encouraged in the new Dietary Guidelines.” This is my personal breakfast and I look forward to a mix of grains, an assortment of sweet berries and a banana with icy cold milk every morning.

Dining out? No problem, there are tips for “Playing it Safe When You Eat Out” with lists for an array of ethnic foods, from French to Mexican. Elisa, your own personal dietician, treats you to some favorite family recipes, which you can prepare at home. Her fast chili recipe is loaded with nutrients yet has less fat, sodium and calories than traditional chili.

1 pound lean ground beef
1/3 cup minced onion
2 teaspoons chili powder

1/4 teaspoon ground cumin
15 1/2 ounces kidney beans, canned and drained (save 1/3 cup of the liquid)

1 cup canned tomato puree

Cook the beef in a large nonstick skillet, breaking it up with a wooden spoon, until lightly browned. Drain off the fat and set aside. In the same skillet, cook the onion until translucent stirring occasionally, about 3 minutes, then season with chili powder and cumin and stir to mix. Add the beans, bean liquid, tomato puree and beef. Bring to the edge of a boil then reduce heat to medium-low and simmer, covered, for 10 minutes. Makes 4 servings. Calories: 250 per serving.

Recipe adapted from So What Can I Eat (2006).

Perhaps for you, the phrase "sit up straight – don't slouch" recalls a nagging granny voice from across your childhood dinner table. Or perhaps it's a dance instructor, or a yoga teacher, or an etiquette expert. The point is, this advice is more worthwhile than you may have once believed. I, for one, was a 16-year-old huncher because my gawky height advantage made me miss out on whispers among my friends. It didn't cross my mind until years later that this was much worse than just being improper or unladylike. It was compromising my stomach muscles and my shoulders, it was damaging my spine, and it was constricting my breathing. Now that I've realized the wide-ranging effects of slouching, that old granny voice sounds a whole lot wiser.

Besides the psychological reasons behind a gawky teenager's slouching, there are anatomical impulses that make poor posture part of a natural progression. We live in a forward facing world. Everything we do is towards the front. We speak forward, we move forward, we react forward. Our shoulders have a tendency to roll forward. Young children are like sprouting bean plants, reaching straight up for the sky. But put that child at a desk for a dozen years and cut funding for his or her physical education classes. Watch how that child caves in towards his or her chest. Then give that growing child, now a young adult, a seat in a cubicle, with attention on a computer screen and fingertips striking a keyboard. The hunch worsens. As that young adult sits at the steering wheel of a car, on a couch in front of a television (or years later, in a wheelchair in the park on a spring day), the shoulders creep so far forward and the shoulder blades so spread far apart, that the chest becomes almost concave. But there is time to save yourself from this seemingly inevitable fate.

Your spine consists of separate vertebrae, each of which is sort of like a jelly donut: soft on the inside and strong on the outside. In an aligned spine, these vertebrae are stacked on top of each other without strain. However, there is a natural curve to the spine, so the vertebrae are not straight up and down. The spine is divided into three sections: the cervical vertebra is from the base of the skull to the C7 vertebra. That's the knobby one that sticks out more than the others at the top of your back. From that vertebra to the T12 vertebra, which is in the middle of your back, is the Thoracic vertebra. Just below T12 is L1. From L1 to L5, just five vertebrae, is the Lumbar spine. Each of these sections curves in a "C" formation, creating a connected curving line. Thus, to have your back in alignment does not mean it is entirely straight. It means, more precisely, that each vertebra is in line with its neighbors, and the natural curve of your spine is intact. A simple exercise to practice good alignment involves attentiveness to these curves in your spine.

By simply rolling your shoulders back so that your shoulder blades lower down your back, you compensate for that forward tendency that leads to poor posture and permanent problems. So if you just focus, once in a while, when you take a deep breath, on rolling your shoulders down your back, you are giving balance to your posture.

Once you've rolled your shoulder blades down your back, take a deep breath in. Fill your lungs with air. Your lungs have the most capillaries at the bottom, so it's good to fill your lungs deeply, almost like you would fill a glass, from the bottom up. Tuck your tailbone beneath you, let your stomach hollow. This "Figure 8" breathing was illuminated to me by Anusara Yoga mentors Lois Nesbitt, Elena Brower, and Julie Dohrman.

As you inhale, let your breath go from your lower back and waist (think kidneys!) to your chest, then allow it to circulate through your shoulders and down your spine, and then to the bottom of your belly. If this is difficult to perceive, just give it a try. Take a deep, slow inhale and picture your breath filling your body in a figure 8 motion. Just one complete inhale and exhale like this, and you will feel how your spine is supposed to be aligned. Your stomach muscles strengthen so you're holding yourself up from the root up. The muscles in your lower back counteract that tension in the stomach with their own strength. Your shoulder blades draw closer together, creating space in your chest. And suddenly, your head seems to float atop your neck, each vertebra in line with the last. It's so refreshing, it's like a splash of cold water on your face on a stifling, tired day.

A Pill by Any Other Name

For my allergies, I take Loratadine and sometimes Diphenhydramine HCL. For headaches, I take Acetaminophen. Those are the generic names for Claritin, Benadryl and Tylenol. I also take generic versions of prescription drugs when they are available. The reason: generic drugs are much less expensive than brand-name drugs, but are exactly the same in terms of safety and performance.

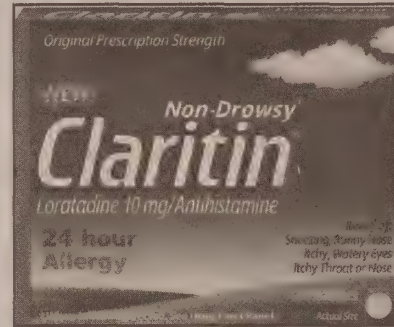

I didn't always think this way, and I know people who refuse to buy generic drugs, believing that the name-brand drugs are better in some way. This belief system comes from two factors. First, we all know that generic products at the supermarket are not always as good as name-brand products. For example, I have found that the financial savings associated with buying store-brand aluminum foil are far outweighed by the quality benefits of buying Reynolds Wrap. On the other hand, some store-brand foods are the same or even better than name-brand foods. It is really just a trial and error process.

Secondly, advertising works. Name-brand drug companies spend a fortune on advertising, even after their patents have expired and competing generic brands have arrived to market, while the generic companies generally do not advertise at all. Claritin is a perfect example. One cannot turn on the TV without hearing about the benefits of Claritin. So when we go to the drug store and see Claritin next to Rite Aid Loratadine, we may hesitate on buying the generic version, even though the active ingredient in Claritin IS Loratadine.

My change of heart occurred when I was a lawyer working on a case involving companies that manufacture generic drugs. As part of the case, I needed to acquire a basic familiarity with the process that generic companies must go through in order to bring generic drugs to market. The process is an intensive one, involving extensive studies and analyses, and culminating in the submission of enormous scientific documents describing the results. The Food and Drug Administration will not allow a generic drug to come to market unless it is shown to be as safe and as effective – or efficacious, in FDA parlance – as the name-brand. This is more difficult than one might think. Although the chemical compound of the active ingredient is public knowledge, the way the chemical is packaged with inactive substances to create the pills we take can make a difference in how the chemical compound is absorbed into our bodies.

Here is what the FDA has to say about generic drugs:

"The generic version works like the brand-name drug in dosage, strength, performance and use, and must meet the same quality and safety standards."

"All generic drugs are put through a rigorous, multi-step review process."

"Generic drugs look different because certain inactive ingredients, such as colors and flavorings, may be different. These ingredients do not affect the performance, safety or effectiveness of the generic drug."

"The FDA makes it tough to become a generic drug in America, so you can feel confident about taking your generic drugs."

These safety procedures apply to prescription and over-the-counter drugs. (Whether a drug is prescription or not depends on a completely different set of concerns.) So a prescription name-brand drug might have a prescription generic version (if the original manufacturer's patent has expired and a generic company has passed the tests to market a generic version), while at other times an over-the-counter name-brand drug might be the only version available (if the patent has not expired or no generic company has been able to pass the tests). Interestingly, in many cases, a generic drug is made by the manufacturer of the name-brand – a clever way to maintain market share. But whoever is responsible for bringing the generic drug to market has undergone the FDA's rigorous tests.

If a name-brand drug you take does have a generic version, you should save yourself some money and buy that version. For prescription drugs, you will need to advise your doctor to direct the pharmacy to use the generic version. For over-the-counter drugs, the generic version is usually right next to the name-brand version. Of course, you should not take any drug without consulting with your doctor first, and if you have any questions at all about taking the generic version of a drug, you, likewise, should consult with your doctor.

Eat More, Feel Full, Lose Weight

Okay, so someone made me aware that there are only eight weeks left until summer. Well, until Memorial Day, which for the last two years has been an absolute bust when it came to the weather. This year, it'll be different. I have it on good authority from the man upstairs. (No, not Dan, the other man with the three-letter name, a couple of flights higher up.)

Anyway, fear of this good weather has overcome me. The fact that I'm going to have to cast away the sweaters and don the swim trunks is frightening – especially because all winter I've kept warm with rich, creamy soups and loaves of fresh bread.

Now, with the shirtless season approaching, I've realized I'm going to have to cook off these extra pounds. I know my body and for me, the gym and running are not enough. I'm going to have to make some serious changes to my eating habits.

The one problem with the way I eat is that I have the appetite of a wolverine (NB: it is long been known that wolverines gorge until they are utterly and completely full). So, the dilemma is to figure out a way to get fit and still feel full. While studying the options over a heaping bowl of chili, I stumbled upon something called Low Energy Density eating. Don't let the name fool you. The Lower the energy density, the more you can eat.

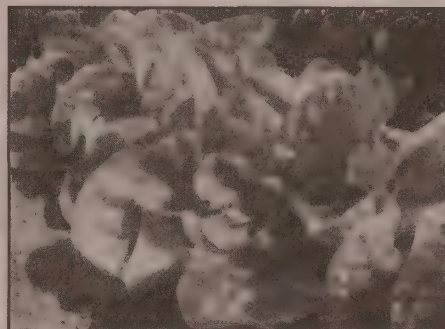

The Low Density plan is one of the simpler in the world and most of us probably do it to an extent already. Forget about the no or low-carbs deal. I mean, as much as eating a pound and a half of bacon every morning sounds great, it really can't be that good for you. So think smart and eat smart. Actually, the trick is to outsmart yourself. In the simplest terms, the plan is to fill your stomach with as much low-calorie food as you can before you eat your main meal.

Feeling full for many means feeling satisfied. No one likes walking away from the table like Oliver Twist – Please sir, can I have some more? This isn't a diet, you're not supposed to feel like you're eating less, you're supposed to feel like you've just walked away from a banquet and you couldn't fit another piece of food in your mouth. If it sounds too good to be true, believe me, it's not. It's just a matter of changing your eating lifestyle.

The concept is all based on calories. As you probably know calories give us the energy to get through our daily lives. The more we do, walking, running, tennis, swimming, etc. the more calories we burn. Great, but the more we eat, the more calories we take on, right? Well, not exactly. All foods have their own amount of calories. A half-cup of M&Ms has more calories than a half-cup of carrots (512 calories vs 26 calories) and a pound of cake has more calories than a pound of lettuce. This should come as no surprise, but junk food has more calories than healthy food, on the whole. Sure a Snickers may satisfy you for a few minutes, but generally it's not going to be enough if you're really hungry.

So here are the tricks. Before wolfing down dinner, eat a large bowl of salad with a light dressing. The salad, consisting of mostly vegetables, has a much lower energy density than the steak you may be eating as the main course. So the more you eat of the salad, the more full you will be by the time you eat the steak, leaving you eating less of the steak. If you're not up for a salad, try a broth-based vegetable soup. The more low density you eat, the better. Not only do vegetables and fruits have fewer calories than the alternative (creamy soups, fried calamari, etc), they also have more vitamins and minerals that your body needs. It's a win-win situation. If you follow this model for all your meals, you will be consuming fewer calories per meal. Fewer calories means the body will have to burn energy from somewhere else . . . like the calories already stored inside your body.

Other suggestions are to swap fruits for cereal in the morning. In other words, add a few strawberries and remove some of the cereal. An added benefit is that most cereals have a high amount of fiber, which takes longer to break down, making you feel full longer.

It's really a rather easy process. So next time you're out at the grocer's, linger in the produce aisle a little longer than usual. Pick up all the fruits and veggies you can handle, just avoid dried fruits, as they are crammed with sugar and calories. Good luck and see you on the beach in two months.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Worthwhile Victorian Relic

If you are like me, you don't mind plants that require special care in the garden, provided they add interesting texture, can perform as specimens, and/or produce beautiful flowers. While I do not relish digging up bulbs, rhizomes, and tubers in the fall to over-winter tender plants, the Canna (or Canna lily) is one of those must-have plants for sunny spots in the garden. Somehow I seem to tolerate the additional care required to have these unusual, tropical plants as part of my summer display.

The Canna was very popular in Victorian times. They were widely grown in France, Hungary, and the United Kingdom during the last century. At one time there were hundreds of cultivars available, but many became extinct when popularity waned in the 1930s and 1940s. There has been increasing interest in the plant in recent years, however, and many new hybrids are available on a yearly basis.

The Canna is a genus of about ten species of flowering plant that comprises the genus in the family known as Cannaceae. The genus is native to tropical and subtropical regions of this hemisphere, from the southern United States to northern Argentina. Essentially, they are classified as a subtropical perennial herb.

The rhizome of the canna was originally used as a starchy food – but requires significant preparation.

It is still a food source in the Andes, Vietnam, and China where it is turned into cellophane-like noodles. From a gardener's perspective, the plant produces large, tropical-looking leaves and beautiful flowers. The leaves are broad and flat, and grow out of the stem in long, narrow rolls that unfurl as they mature. Leaves may be green, bronze, maroon, or variegated.

Flowers are typically red, orange, yellow or any combination of these colors, though some of the latest hybrids can come in a lovely salmon or pink color. The wild species often grow as tall as six feet, but there is a wide variation in size among cultivated plants; numerous cultivars have been selected for smaller gardens, and the miniature varieties of canna are growing in popularity. These plants may only be eighteen inches tall. It is said that the flowers attract hummingbirds – though my experience does not confirm this fact.

Cannas grow best in a full sun location that receives moderate water. The rhizomes require well-drained soil that is either rich or sandy. In our northeast location, the plants bloom best, and for the longest period, when started early in pots. The beginning of April is a good time to start plants, which can be set out in mid-May. To start the plants, use an organic potting soil or mix that contains some peat. Use four- or five-inch pots – just large enough to accommodate the rhizome. Plant rhizomes three inches beneath the surface of the soil (This depth is required to sustain the plants and keep them from flopping over once situated in the garden.) Place pots in a sunny location that receives high-intensity light. Keep the soil moist, but not wet.

Cannas are carefree and generally do not have problems with garden pests. In warmer parts of the country, the plants sometimes fall victim to leaf rollers – a type of caterpillar that cuts into the leaves, rolls up in them, and pupates. Slugs are fond of cannas and love to dig holes in young leaves before they mature. There is also a canna rust that creates orange spots on the leaves (caused by too much humidity or overly moist soil). Insecticidal soaps and malathion cure the pest problems. A general purpose garden fungicide will reduce rust and other fungi that might attack. Slugs, of course, are a special problem and require ongoing diligence to eradicate. Cannas are one of the garden gems that help create a layered effect. They continue to be a point of interest in the landscape and deserve to be a part of every garden!

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

In Sag Harbor this week, plans move ahead to approve and build the 22 condominiums on the site of the old Rocco's at 21 Water Street. Lately it seems building, selling, and purchasing commercial sites on the East End is the big news. Since this past fall, a number of commercial properties have been placed on the market or sold from Montauk on the South Fork over to Aquebogue on the North Fork. The speculation may very well be that sellers who didn't sell during these past two years, when the market was so hot you couldn't touch it, are trying to make their small fortunes by getting out before values drop. Buyers are taking advantage of the settling, and even flexibility, to the market that has occurred over the past few months.

On the North Fork, wineries and tasting rooms have sold. Inns and restaurants have exchanged hands. In the Hamptons it has been exclusive village retail space, some of the older motels, restaurants, and clubs such as 21 Water Street. Remodeling or renovating a property here is no small financial feat. The Bulova Factory was bought by a high-end developer who has the cash it takes to restore such a landmark and still meet town regulation, codes, and please the preservation groups. A quaint historic village such as Sag Harbor would hardly allow some eyesore to take away from the charm that draws the very tourism it thrives on. In order to do that, developers must carry some serious cash. The property that sold at more than $16 million will cost millions more to restore and renovate.

Whether your dream is opening a shop in the

Greenport Village

Hamptons or to restore an old country inn on the North Fork there is certainly plenty to choose from right now. In Montauk, it's the 60-room Shepherds Neck Inn that was built in 1928, the Memory Motel in town, or Ruschmeyers Inn & Restaurant on the pond. In East Hampton, you have the East Hampton Point resort, and in Sag Harbor there are a number of sizable Queen Anne Victorians just waiting to go B & B.

There are tasting rooms for sale, marinas, horse farms, and restaurants up and down both forks. It is evident this year that there are more commercial properties up for sale than there have been in a very long time. Some of the businesses for sale are ones that have been in existence and not changed hands for decades.

In the Village of Sag Harbor there is an 1840s Victorian storefront for sale. The two-story wooden structure consists of 3000 sq ft of space with an additional 900 sq ft art studio, with COs for three apartments that have all been renovated. The storefront has 10-foot ceilings, wood floors and beam-work, and the original doors. It is listed with Harris Brown Stevens in East Hampton at $2,495,000. In the heart of Greenport Village, priced at $1,450,000, is a 3000 sq ft restaurant plus residence. The building operated as a French restaurant and creperie. The parlor-style dining rooms have seating for 86. The circa 1870s building was completely renovated in 1999.

In New York interest is high in areas such as the West Village where, when a commercial space comes on the market, it gets clamored over. Warehouse space that was recently home to J-Lo's new fashion line has gone up for sale on Washington Street. New York realtors predict that there will certainly be a bidding war on this new-to-market $32 million property. Here, buyers commonly outnumber the properties and buyers are always scoping what's new and gobbling it up. New York preservation groups are no slouches when it comes to protecting their own precious neighborhoods, as they showed recently when they were successful in barring the building of condos in the old offices of Diane Von Furstenberg. What is appealing about the Washington Street property is that it is already zoned to go up 80 more feet, which is a huge commodity in such a tightly restricted area.

SOUTH IN THE NORTH

Dear Dan,

As you may or may not know the Springs Community Theater, a new non-profit community theater group was invited to perform at the John Drew Theater at Guild Hall for the last two weeks in April.

We are truly a community theater group with a dedicated talent and support roster of all age groups and levels of experience stretching our East End community from as far as Riverhead to participate! Rodgers & Hammerstein's "South Pacific" rehearsals are underway nightly at the East Hampton Middle School for our April production at Guild Hall and we need a few more volunteers, actresses, actors, stage hands – and a few more dollars – to succeed in our vision to give quality entertainment to the community at this venue.

They can volunteer at the East Hampton Middle School, rehearsals run during the week and start at 7 p.m. I was wondering if you could let your readers know.

Thank you for your support.

Dear Dan,

A HARVEST OF SPRING UPON LONG ISLAND

*On this first day of spring
I lay aside pen and pencil for sandals and a walking stick.*

Spring has arrived here upon Long Island. It can be seen sprouting with buds upon the lilac bush, or witnessed in the emerald green shoots of grass boldly ascending upwards through the winter brown coat of last year's lawn. Here and there along a path that winds its way through the field and down to the creek bouquets of lemon colored daffodils rise up towards a warming sun, as crimson colored tulips in perfect posture prepare the eye for bolder hues that are yet to come. Down at the Great South Bay skiffs in full sail dot the horizon as long neck swans gracefully lumber the blue. Deep in the Pine Barrens a wood duck is preparing her nest for the ducklings soon to hatch, as ring neck mallard with a skip, plop and a splash settles down into the pond.

Within the village and town there is a flurry of activities now as merchants in all earnestness decorate their shop windows with spring fashions of silk, cotton and imported lace. Garden centers and neighborly convenience stores are suddenly ablaze with potted plant life, mountains of rich fertilizer and tons of sweet lime. Hoes and rakes become popular items again as snow blowers and flat face shovels are now stored away in the shed. Early Saturday morning garage doors are rolled up to the roar of lawn mowers on the run; as pool covers are removed and pumps are primed in preparation for the summer season that is sure to come. Across the island spring can be seen stretching and brisling with life before the rising sun.

For spring dear reader has now begun.

CONTRACTION CORRECTION

Dear Dan,

I have enjoyed reading your paper for so many years, but often have been troubled by the "floating apostrophes" (my term). Did your proofreader miss the lesson on the use of it's and its?

But I think this was the first time I ever saw its with an apostrophe after the s!

(See enclosed samples from February 10, Montauk Pioneer). As far as I know, such a word doesn't even exist.

Here's hoping this little item gets corrected (if anyone cares any more).

Renee Mirman
Montauk

Nobody cares. –DR

SHOW A LITTLE RESPECT

Dear Dan,

Re: A Democratic Observation upon the St. Patrick's Day Parade

As we watched this years St. Patrick's Day parade in Westhampton, I was struck by something I have never seen before. Something I think holds meaning regarding current events. In any parade, I've ever attended, when a military unit passes, people in the crowd invariably applaud. Not this time, not only as units passed, but even as a sole US Marine marched and halted in full-dress uniform, medals and all, carrying an American flag yet.

I wonder if this was the people's way of expressing their disapproval of what we are doing in Iraq. Some-out-on-the-street Democratic expression perhaps.

Regards.

Tom Riedl

Maybe it's the "War." –DR

Police Blotter

Too Much Tint

A man in Southampton was given a ticket after police noticed that there was too much tint in his car window, which is illegal. After police gave the man the ticket, they advised him that if he didn't want people to see him driving inside of his car, that he should wear a hat and sunglasses like the rest of the celebrities.

* * *

Stolen Identity

A woman in Hampton Bays reported to police that somebody stole her identity and made fraudulent charges on her credit card. The woman has not been identified because she is unsure who she now is.

* * *

Caught Red Handed

After being caught with drugs, a man in Hampton Bays tried to get away with it by providing officers with a phony name. The officers later learned that the name was false. The name that the man used was George. How they figured out that the name was fake is interesting. While the criminal was being booked an officer said, "Hey, George, come over here so I can get your fingerprints." To which the criminal responded, "My name is not George, it is Steve."

* * *

Bad Luck

A man driving through Riverhead contacted police when a two-foot long tree branch was thrown at his car and broke the back windshield. Seconds later, a large dog jumped out of the woods, ran behind the car, picked up the two-foot long branch and ran back into the woods.

* * *

Stolen Sink

A construction worker in Sag Harbor reported to police that somebody stole a sink from the construction site that he was working on. The construction worker was reported saying, "It was a clean get away. He stole some soap too."

* * *

Stolen Bike

A man in Sag Harbor reported to police that somebody stole a bicycle from the back yard of his home. He was reported saying, "I want to ride my bicycle, I want to ride my bike. I want to ride my bicycle, I want to ride it where I like."

* * *

The Plumber Hero

An East Hampton plumber walked in on a burglary in progress when he went to a house to investigate a flooding that happened during the week. The plumber found a man upstairs in a bedroom who refused to identify himself. The plumber then quickly took off his jacket to reveal a large P insignia on his shirt and also a cape. He sternly said, "I am plumber man and I will not allow this criminal activity." Plumber man then pulled out his weapon of choice, a plunger, and proceeded to battle the criminal all through the house. When he finally subdued the criminal, he tied his hands behind his back with stainless steel plumbing tape.

Damaged Hot Tub

A man in East Hampton reported to police that someone used his hot tub while he was away and damaged the clips that hold down the cover. The clips will need to be replaced. Investigators are asking the man if they can confiscate the hot tub and bring it down to headquarters so that they can "test" the tub for any other damages.

Lower Mortgage Payments by 45%

With Sophisticated Jumbo Loan Program

NY - Mortgages for multi million dollar homes is typically limited to 50% financing, carries a higher rate and requires full income verification.

A scarcely known loan is available for home purchases and refinances that offers up to 90% financing, cuts monthly payments by as much as 45% and requires no income verification. Additionally there are enhanced tax and pre-payment advantages with increased cash flow not available with other mortgages.

Many wonder why they haven't been informed about this unique loan.
One reason is this loan does not profit lenders in the same way other loans do so they're not easy to find. The company sponsoring these programs, North Atlantic Mortgage Corp., has made a Free report "Sophisticated Jumbo Financing" available. This report also addresses many other unique types of mortgages, credit issues, and most importantly how to get a great Jumbo loan with no income or asset verification.

If you are self-employed, professional or high-income individual, there are many other savvy "secrets" and various loan options that you probably aren't aware that exist.

Simply call 1-877-794-5363 to request this informative free report.

Buyers at 'The Highlands' Attracted by Lifestyle, Layout and Value

All Ages Find These Two New Luxury Communities Particularly Appealing

AQUEBOGUE, March 13, 2006

An author with four children grown and out of the house, Maureen Sullivan decided it was time to sell her home in Manhasset, N.Y. Her intention was to move into a Manhattan co-op. But a visit to The Highlands at Aquebogue, a new luxury single-family community now emerging on the western end of Long Island's prestigious North Fork, changed her mind. "I discovered that for the price of a shoebox in Manhattan, I can get a lovely house in Aquebogue," she said.

Ms. Sullivan already has a home on the North Fork, just 19 miles from Aquebogue. "It has been my vacation home for many years, and I intend to hold on to it," she said. "But it's in Southold, in an area that quiets down in the winter. The nice thing about The Highlands at Aquebogue is that there will always be people around, things to do, and plenty of activity."

The Highlands at Aquebogue borders the picturesque Long Island National Golf Club, and the nearby Highlands at Reeves is adjacent to the scenic Cherry Creek Golf Course. Now under development by Westminster Communities, both are among the last master-planned communities of their kind in the area.

Each community will offer three- and four-bedroom homes and up to 3,200 square feet. In late 2005, ranch style models became available both at Aquebogue and Reeves, providing another housing option. Resort-style amenities include a neighborhood clubhouse, swimming pool, tennis courts, beautifully landscaped grounds and several pristine ponds. Residents also will benefit from maintenance and landscaping services provided by the Homeowner's Association.

It is these very amenities that clinched the deal for many buyers, including Ms. Sullivan. "I never have to worry about mowing the lawn or shoveling snow," she said. "My kids were surprised that I made this radical flip-flop from wanting to be a city person to deciding to live in Aquebogue. But this suits me well.

When I want to be in the city, a convenient jitney or train will take me there. And I have so much space. It's definitely worth the trade-off."

A Mix of Age and Interests

Ms. Sullivan is a writer who focuses on the lifestyles of the Baby Boomer generation, and now finds herself a part of the very trends she has described in her books.

"People in their 50s and 60s are not necessarily relocating to the sun states," she explained. "Many want to stay close to their children and grandchildren, and, like me, don't want to move into a 55+ community. They want to enjoy living with people of all ages. That's another thing about The Highlands that attracted me."

Indeed, The Highlands is drawing buyers from many age groups and locales. The Rogers family is a case in point — a young family selling their home in Montauk to move into the Highlands. "My husband and I wanted a neighborhood where we could raise children, knowing that there are other families in the same age group, with shopping and transportation nearby," said Jessica Rogers, who recently gave birth to her first child. "We like the idea of having a clubhouse and a community pool where kids can play. The houses are awesome. And it is the perfect location for us: my in-laws live in Montauk, my parents are in the Port Jefferson area, we have relatives in Connecticut, and we have a vacation home in Pennsylvania. Now everything is within easy reach. It's perfect for a growing family."

Beauty Combined With Access

The North Fork of Long Island has long been celebrated by artists, fishermen and wealthy vacationers. Its pastoral beauty remains dotted with farms, villages, vineyards and stately mansions.

"The Highlands at Reeves and The Highlands at Aquebogue offer magnificent views and a certain serenity, yet they are within easy reach of the Long Island Expressway and both the Hamptons and Long Island Sound's magnificent beaches," said Sam Gershwin, president of Westminster Communities. "Residents also will enjoy close proximity to the region's shops, dining, wineries, parks and theaters."

The Highlands at Reeves will include 60 homes, and The Highlands at Aquebogue will have 79. A variety of layouts feature first-floor master bedroom suites, large eat-in kitchens, generous living space and two-car garages.

The homes are situated on cul-de-sac roadways to maximize views of the fairways as well as the serene expanses of open landscaped grounds, neighborhood ponds, and surrounding farm land.

Golf, Vineyards, and Shopping

The reasons cited by buyers for choosing these homes vary as much as the buyers themselves. Sherry Cohen and her husband currently live in Manhattan. "My husband is an avid golfer, so a home adjacent to a golf course is very appealing," she said. "The houses have beautiful layouts. We're thinking it will be a great place to retire to eventually."

"We love having all those vineyards in the area," said Martha Jaeckle of Garden City. She and her husband Don Kearney purchased a home in The Highlands at Aquebogue to use as a vacation residence. "The North Fork is a much easier commute and much less hectic than Montauk or the Hamptons."

"I think The Highlands is a great value," said Vincent Lyons of Stony Brook. "We have a vacation property in New Hampshire, and the ferry is only 20 minutes from Aquebogue. We also have a sailboat, and this location gives me easy access to the Sound and The Great Peconic Bay. And I love the design of these homes — contemporary but with some classic features."

Several homes are available for viewing, including "The Dawson", winner of the prestigious, "Model Home Of The Year" award.

The sales center is open daily from 11-5 and is located on Sound avenue in Aquebogue. You may also call to arrange a private tour after hours by calling 631-722-5900 or visiting www.highlandseastend.com.

"I think it is very important to have a seasoned, hands-on support staff in the travel industry. Websites and telephone menus are great but when passengers have specific needs or concerns, they need to talk to a real person."

32 Years of... Customer Support

From our experienced drivers to onboard attendants; courteous customer support to on-site safety and maintenance departments, there's always someone there for you at Hampton Jitney.

Hampton Jitney now runs on the North Fork also!
